PREFACE

THE present volume is not intended to supersede the revised edition of Cicero's Select Orations. It has been prepared to meet the needs of those teachers who prefer marked quantities and who wish to introduce their students to Cicero's Letters. Several orations have been omitted, and their place is supplied by a careful selection from Cicero's correspondence. The letters are arranged chronologically, like the orations. They throw light on Cicero's character, on Roman political history, and on various phases of ancient manners, and at the same time they illustrate almost every variety of letter-writing, — from hasty notes on family matters to weighty discussions of public policy. One letter from Pompey to Cicero and one from Cæsar have also been included.

Several maps have been added, and a new plan of the Forum, exhibiting the remarkable series of excavations begun in 1899. These have brought to light the Comitium, the Basilica Aemilia, the Lake and Sanctuary of Juturna, and other important remains. The plan is taken, with slight modifications, from that in Richter's Topographie der Stadt Rom (edition of 1901). For permission to reproduce the figure of the base of Cæsar's column from Lanciani's New Tales of Old Rome, the editors are indebted to Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin, and Company, the publishers of that interesting work. Several new maps are also included in the present volume. The vocabulary has been carefully revised.

The following extract from the Preface to the Select Orations may be appended: —

"The present volume is practically an entirely new work, since the notes have been almost wholly rewritten, and very extensive additions have been made. The revising editors have kept constantly in mind the original design, which gave prominence to matters of historical and political interest. Though in pursuance of the original design the orations are arranged in chronological order, yet, by the fuller annotation of Roscius and the Catilines, care has been taken to enable teachers to begin with either, according to their judgment or habit.

“The admirable historical and political work of the late Professor W. F. Allen has not been reduced, but collected into introductory chapters for convenience of continued reading and reference. The grammatical discussions have been much increased, the revisers having found, by instructive experience, that in order to profit by a book the pupil must be able to read it, and for this a knowledge of the usages of the language is indispensable. •

“The treatment of the orations rhetorically and logically has been very much extended, with the hope of making the book more useful, not only for the study of Latin, but also for the study of rhetorical composition generally. The very numerous illustrations have not been inserted merely to make a picture book, but to give the pupil some sense of the reality of the orations as a part of history. Teachers and others who take a more intelligent interest in these ancient memorials, will find much explanatory and critical comment in the numbered list of illustrations. A very large increase of introductory matter has seemed desirable in view of the growing interest in the study of the history of civilization.”

The editors have enjoyed the scholarly coöperation of Mr. M. Grant Daniell, to whom they are indebted for many valuable suggestions.

EXPLANATION OF THE VIEW OF THE FORUM.

The background shows the southeasterly side of the Capitoline hill. The blank wall in the centre is the rear of the Palazzo dei Senatori, which stands on the saddle between the two summits (inter duos lucos). The lower part of this wall is very old, and is commonly supposed to be the wall of the Tabularium, or Record Office.

The modern buildings on the right occupy the site of the ancient Citadel (Arx); those on the left, that of the Capitolium. In front, projected against the wall of the Tabularium, is, on the right, the Column of Phocas, a late monument of slight importance; at the left of that are the ruins of the Temple of Vespasian (three Corinthian columns, of which only two show in the view); farther to the left is a ruin with eight Ionic columns, — the Temple of Saturn, built in the time of the Empire on the site of the earlier Temple of Saturn, which served during the Republic as the Aerarium, or Treasury. Below, at the right of the picture, is the Arch of Septimius Severus: this probably occupies part of the space of the earlier Senaculum, or gathering-place of the Senators. Below the Temple and in front of the Arch is the open space of the Forum, distinguishable by the flagging: here stood the Rostra. To the left, below the Temple of Saturn, are the ruins of the Basilica Julia. At the extreme left of the picture, in the foreground, are three Corinthian columns, the only remains of the famous Temple of Castor. Near the point where the spectator is supposed to stand are the ruins of the Atrium Vestae and the Regia.

INTRODUCTION

I. LIFE OF CICERO.

MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO, partly on account of his natural abilities and partly on account of the times in which he lived, has left a name associated with some of the most important events in the history of the world, as well as with some of the most potent forces in our civilization. Few men have made so distinct an impression on modern literature and thought. He touched many things which he did not adorn, but there is hardly any kind of intellectual activity that is not conspicuously indebted to his precepts or his example.

I. CICERO'S LIFE FROM HIS BIRTH TO THE OPENING OF HIS POLITICAL CAREER (B.C. 106-76).

Cicero was born at Arpinum, a city with the Roman franchise (which was also the birthplace of Marius), Jan. 3, B.C. 106, of an equestrian family. His grandfather, who had a small estate in that region, was of Volscian stock, and thus belonged to the old virile country people of the republic. His grandmother was a Gratidia, closely connected by adoption with the great Marius and with prominent Roman politicians. His father, who was the eldest son, had increased the family estate by agriculture and by the profits of a fulling-mill, so that he was among the richest of his townsmen, and possessed the census of a Roman knight. By his marriage with Helvia, a woman of the nobility, he became connected with many senatorial families. She was a woman of great economic and domestic virtues, and a strong support to her husband, who was of a somewhat weak constitution. The father was a man of cultivated mind and devoted himself to the education of his two sons, Marcus, afterwards the orator, and the younger brother Quintus. For this purpose he removed to the city. His ambition, like that of every Roman of fortune, was to have his sons enter politics and so to establish a senatorial family. He lived to see both of them succeed in this career, and the elder become one of the most distinguished men in Rome.

Cicero himself was early stimulated by the success of Marius and the general atmosphere of Roman ambition to desire a prominent place in the state.¹ His father's connections with men and women of rank brought the boy into contact with the great orators M. Antonius and L. Crassus,² who interested themselves in his education.³ Among his companions were the sons of Aculeo, Lucius Cicero, his cousin, his intimate friend Atticus, L. Torquatus, C. Marius the younger, and L. Ælius Tubero. His instructors were Greeks; but, as he had already formed the purpose of attaining office through the power of oratory, he did not confine himself to theoretical or technical learning. He frequented the Forum to hear the great orators of his day, especially Antonius and Crassus, who discoursed with him on literary subjects, so that they became in a manner his teachers. He received instruction from Archias⁴; he sought the society of L. Accius, the poet, and he studied the art of delivery in the theatre, becoming intimately acquainted with the great actors Roscius and Æsopus. He practised many kinds of composition, but his most important means of education, as he tells us, was translation from the Greek.

⁴ See Defence of Archias, ch. i.

At the age of sixteen (B.C. 90), Cicero received the toga virilis (the "coming out" of a Roman boy), and from that time he devoted himself to law and statesmanship as well as oratory. For this purpose he was put under the charge of Mucius Scævola, the augur, and later he attached himself to the no less celebrated Pontifex of the same name. In B.C. 89 he served one campaign in the army under Cn. Pompeius Strabo. After this short military experience, he returned with still greater vigor to his literary and political studies. He studied philosophy under Phædrus and Philo, oratory under Molo of Rhodes, and all the branches of a liberal education under Diodotus the Stoic.

When about twenty-five years of age, Cicero began his active career. It was customary to win one's spurs by attacking some political opponent; but this was contrary to Cicero's pacific nature, and throughout his life he prided himself on always taking the side of the defence. His first oratorical efforts have not been preserved to us. The earliest of his orations which we possess is his defence of P. Quinctius in a civil action (B.C. 81). This suit involved no political question; but no case at that time could be entirely free from politics in one form or another, and nothing is more significant of Cicero's character than the skill with which he constantly used political bias for his client's advantage without seeming to take sides. To defend Quinctius was a bold undertaking for a young advocate; for the opposing counsel was the great orator Hortensius,¹ backed by powerful influence on behalf of the plaintiff. The case, too, was a somewhat dry one; but Cicero's skill as an advocate is shown by the fact that he raises it above the ordinary business and technical level into a question of universal justice and the rights of common humanity.

Next year occurred the trial of Sextus Roscius of Ameria for parricide (B.C. 80), a case growing out of the abuses of Sulla's dictatorship.¹ Cicero showed his courage by undertaking the defence, and his forensic skill by converting his plea into a powerful attack on the accusers in the regular manner of Roman invective. In B.C. 79 he came into still more daring antagonism with Sulla in the case of a woman of Arretium. The oration has not come down to us, but from its boldness it must have added greatly to the orator's fame. The same year — either on account of his health or, less probably, from fear of Sulla — he went to Greece and the East to continue his studies; for at that time such a journey was like "going to Europe" among us. He visited the greatest orators, rhetoricians, and philosophers of the East, especially at Rhodes, then a seat of the highest culture. After an absence of two years, he returned to Rome, with an improved style of oratory, and again engaged in law cases, in which he had as opponents his two great rivals Hortensius and Cotta.

II. FROM THE QUÆSTORSHIP IN SICILY TO THE CONSULSHIP (B.C. 75–64).

In B.C. 76 Cicero began his political career, becoming candidate for the quæstorship (the lowest grade of the cursus honorum),² while Cotta was candidate for the consulship and Hortensius for the prætorship. All three were elected, and Cicero's lot³ assigned him to the province of Sicily under Sextus Peducæus. It was in this administration that his ability and honesty gained the favor of the Sicilians, which gave him the great opportunity of his life in the impeachment of Verres, in B.C. 70.⁴ This prosecution he undertook in the interests of his own ambition, in spite of the fact that the Senate was as a class on the side of the accused, who was also supported by many of the most influential men of the state. But it was, on the other hand, a popular cause, and many of the most decent of the nobility favored it. The orator's success, by force of talent and honest industry, against the tricks of Verres and his counsel Hortensius broke the domination of this rival in the courts,¹ and made Cicero the first advocate of his time.

In B.C. 69 Cicero became curule ædile, and in B.C. 67 he was elected prætor with great unanimity. In the latter year began the agitation for the Manilian Law,² by his advocacy of which Cicero endeared himself to the people and gained the favor of Pompey, whose powerful support was a kind of bulwark against the envious and exclusive nobility. In his prætorship (B.C. 66) he was allotted to the presidency of the Court for Extortion,³ and in this, as in all his public offices, he was honest and unselfish. During all these years he had continued his career as an advocate, engaging in such cases as seemed likely to extend his political influence and advance him most rapidly in the regular succession of curule offices. After his prætorship he refused a province⁴ in order to remain at home and canvass for his consulship.

III. CONSULSHIP (B.C. 63).

For the consulship of B.C. 63 there were six candidates, but of these only Cicero, Catiline, and C. Antonius were prominent. The contest was not merely one of personal ambition. The first and second conspiracies of Catiline, as well as his notorious character, could have left no doubt that his aims were treasonable. Antonius had combined with him for mutual support in securing election by illegal means, and was himself a weak and unprincipled man. On the other hand, Cicero was a novus homo,¹ a champion of the Equites (though without being an enemy of the senatorial order), and had had an unusually clean record in his office as well as in the Forum. Thus the cause of Cicero's ambition was, at the same time, the cause of good government against both the worthless and debauched members of the senatorial order on the one hand, and the dregs of the people on the other. It was also the cause of the great middle class against the patricians and the official nobility, who were so entrenched in power that for many years no novus homo had been elected consul. The success of Cicero unquestionably prolonged the existence of the already doomed republic. Antonius, the less dangerous of his two rivals, was elected as his colleague.

Cicero had now reached the goal for which he had striven from his earliest youth. His administration is famous for the overthrow of the Catilinarian conspiracy, which has cast into obscurity all his other consular acts. These, however, were of such a character, in relation to the needs of the times, as to be unimportant. By birth an eques, but by virtue of his offices a member of the senatorial order, Cicero had always been eager to reconcile and unite these, the two upper classes in Roman society and politics.² He failed to see that the real needs of the commonwealth, as well as its real strength, centred in the interests of the common people. His association with Pompey, and his own rise in official rank, made him incline more and more to the side of the Senate, and he seems to have thought it his mission to restore that body, now thoroughly effete, to its former purity and political importance. The minor acts of his administration³ were dictated by such sentiments as these,

The history of Catiline's conspiracy is given in the Introduction to the four Orations against Catiline,¹ and need not be repeated here. The conspirators were completely thwarted, and five of them were, in accordance with a resolution of the Senate, put to death by the consul without a trial. This victory was the climax of Cicero's career, and he always regarded it as one of the greatest of human achievements. In fact, however, it marked the beginning of his downfall.

IV. CONSULSHIP TO BANISHMENT (B.C. 63-58).

The execution of the conspirators without the forms of law was a blunder, and grievously did Cicero answer for it. He had distinctly violated the constitution, and thus he had laid himself open to the attacks of his enemies. At the end of his consulship, one of the tribunes, Q. Metellus Nepos, prevented him from making the customary speech to the people "because he had put to death Roman citizens without a trial." The next year, when he was defending P. Sulla, the accuser (L. Torquatus) upbraided him as a tyrant, "the third foreign king of Rome." A year later P. Clodius² began to speak of him in the same terms. Clodius, indeed, continued to pursue him till he accomplished his banishment and the confiscation of his property. Almost the whole time from his consulship till the year of his banishment was spent in seeking support against his enemies. He attached himself more closely to Pompey, and pleaded causes of all kinds to win friends, but in vain.

In B.C. 60 Roman politics took a turn extremely unfavorable to Cicero. Pompey, who on his return from the East had been unfairly treated by the extreme senatorial party, allied himself with the democratic leaders, Cæsar and Crassus, in a coalition often called the First Triumvirate. As a result, the Senate became for a time almost powerless, and everything was in the hands of the popular party. The next year, Cæsar, as consul, procured the passage of an iniquitous law for dividing the fertile and populous territory of Campania among needy citizens of Rome. Cicero refused to serve on the board appointed to execute this law. Thus he not only exasperated the mob, but brought down upon himself the resentment of the triumvirs, who, though two of them, Cæsar and Pompey, still professed to be his personal friends, refused to protect him against the attacks of his enemies. Accordingly, in B.C. 58, Clodius, then tribune,¹ brought forward a law that whoever had put to death a Roman citizen, without trial, "should be denied the use of fire and water" (the Roman formula for banishment). This bill was obviously aimed at Cicero's action in the case of the Catilinarians. Cicero at once took alarm, and after appealing in vain to the consuls of the year, L. Calpurnius Piso and A. Gabinius, as well as to Pompey, left Rome about March 20, just as the affair was coming to blows. Immediately after his departure, Clodius procured the passage of a special bill against him, forbidding him, by name, the use of fire or water anywhere within four hundred miles of Rome. At the same time his house on the Palatine² and his Tusculan³ villa were pillaged and destroyed by a mob. Upon receiving news of these proceedings, Cicero prepared to leave Italy altogether. He embarked from Brundisium, April 29, and arrived at Thessalonica on the 23d of May.¹ Here he remained as the guest of his friend Plancius, then quæstor of Macedonia, until November, when he removed to Dyrrachium. His friends at Rome were constantly agitating for his recall, but without success.

The next year, however, B.C. 57, it suited the designs of Pompey, then once more inclining to the senatorial party, to allow his return. His influence with the nobility as well as with the equestrian order, was a point to be secured in the great game of politics. On the 1st of January, the consul L. Cornelius Lentulus Spinther brought forward a bill for his recall. This was vetoed by a tribune. Other attempts were made by his friends, which resulted only in riot and disorder. Finally, partly through the efforts of T. Annius Milo, who met the violence of Clodius with opposing violence, partly through the partisanship of Pompey and the Senate, which brought to the city the citizens of the Municipia and the Italian colonies ("the country members"),² a law was passed, Aug. 4, B.C. 57, revoking the decree of exile. Cicero arrived in Rome September 4. His journey through Italy was like a continuous triumphal procession, and to his exalted imagination, freedom, which had departed with him, was now returned to Rome. But in fact his restoration had been merely a piece of selfish policy on the part of the great leaders. He remained the most consummate rhetorician of all time, but his prominence in the state was gone forever, except for a brief period (B.C. 43). He had never been a statesman, and now he had not the chance to be even a politician.

V. FROM CICERO'S RECALL TO THE BREAKING OUT OF THE CIVIL WAR (B.C. 56-49).

Upon his return he delivered two famous speeches¹ (one in the Senate and one before the people), in which he thanked the state for restoring him, and lauded Pompey to the skies. The "triumvirs" were still all-powerful at Rome, and Cicero, like the rest, was forced to conform to their wishes and designs. In this same year he proposed a measure which gave Pompey extraordinary powers over the provincial grain market, for the purpose of securing the city against scarcity of provisions. Next year (B.C. 56) he spoke strongly in favor of continuing Cæsar's proconsular authority in Gaul.² With Crassus, the third "triumvir," Cicero had never been on good terms, but, at the request of the other two triumvirs, he became reconciled with him in B.C. 55, shortly before the latter set out on his fatal expedition against the Parthians.

During these years, becoming less and less important in politics, Cicero began to devote himself more to literature, and wrote the De Oratore, the Republic, and the treatise De Legibus. He also continued his activity at the bar on his own behalf and that of his friends, as well as at the request of the powerful leaders. He secured the restoration of his property,³ and defended Sestius,⁴ who had been active in his recall. Toward the end of this period he also defended Milo for the murder of Clodius.⁵ His defence of Gabinius and Vatinius (B.C. 54), creatures of Pompey and Cæsar respectively, was less honorable to him; but he was hardly a free agent in these matters. "I am distressed," he writes to his brother Quintus, "I am distressed that there is no longer any government nor any courts, and that this time of my life, which ought to be brilliant with the prestige of a Senator, is either worn out in the labors of the Forum, or made endurable by literature at home. Of my enemies, some I do not oppose, and others I even defend. I am not only not free to think as I will, but not even to hate as I will.”¹

The disturbances following the death of Clodius led to the appointment of Pompey as consul without colleague (practically dictator), in B.C. 52. One of his acts was to pass a law postponing the provincial administration of consuls and prætors until five years after their year of office. The interval was to be filled by such former magistrates as had never held a province. Among these was Cicero, who therefore had to submit to the lot. He drew Cilicia, in which an inroad of the Parthians was expected.

About May 1, B.C. 51, he set out for this province. His administration was in accord with the principles expressed in his writings, — clean and honest, — a thing worthy of notice in an age of corruption and greed. He had the good fortune to escape the test of a formidable war, but he was successful in overcoming some tribes of plundering mountaineers. For this he was hailed as imperator, according to custom, and he even hoped for the honor of a triumph, the highest conventional distinction which a Roman could obtain. He returned to Rome late in B.C. 50, and was still endeavoring to secure permission to celebrate his triumph² when the great Civil War between Cæsar and Pompey broke out (B.C. 49).³

VI. FROM THE BEGINNING OF THE CIVIL WAR TO THE MURDER OF CÆSAR (B.C. 49-44).

Cicero was now in a very difficult position. It became necessary for every man of importance to take sides; yet he could not see his way clear to join either party. For some time he vacillated, while both Cæsar and Pompey made earnest efforts to secure his support.¹ His great hope was to mediate between them; and, after Pompey had left Italy, he remained behind with this end in view. Finally, however, he decided for Pompey as the champion of the senatorial party, and set out, though with great reluctance, to join him at Dyrrachium (June 11, B.C. 49). In the camp he found things even worse than he had expected, and he gave up the cause of the Republic for lost. On account of illness he was not present at the Battle of Pharsalia (Aug. 9, B.C. 48). After the fate of the contest was decided, he refused to continue the struggle or to follow the adherents of the lost cause to Africa, but returned to Italy (September, B.C. 48), to make terms with the conqueror.² He remained at Brundisium until Cæsar's return from Egypt in September, B.C. 47, when he at once sought an interview. Cæsar received him with great kindness and respect, and allowed him once more to return to Rome.

From this time until the assassination of Cæsar in B.C. 44, Cicero remained for the most part in retirement at his Tusculan villa, absorbed in literary pursuits, though in B.C. 46 he delivered his Oration for Marcellus (remarkable for its praise of Cæsar), and his Defence of Ligarius, and, in the following year, his Defence of King Deiotarus of Galatia, charged with attempting the murder of Cæsar. The chief literary fruits of this period of leisure were three works on oratory (De Claris Orato- ribus, Orator, and De Partitione Oratoria), and several philosophic works (De Finibus Bonorum et Malorum, Academica, Tusculanae Quaestiones, De Natura Deorum, De Senectute). Meantime his domestic relations were far from happy. In B.C. 46 he had divorced his wife Terentia and married his rich young ward Publilia, from whom, however, he separated in the following year. In B.C. 45 his daughter Tullia died suddenly. Cicero was tenderly attached to her, and it was in part as a distraction from his grief that he wrote some of the works just mentioned. He now seemed to be thoroughly given over to a life of dignified literary retirement, when the murder of Cæsar (March 15, B.C. 44) once more plunged the state into a condition of anarchy.

VII. FROM THE MURDER OF CÆSAR TO THE DEATH OF CICERO (B.C. 44-43).

Though Cicero had no share in the conspiracy against Cæsar, his sympathy was counted on by Brutus and Cassius, and he hailed the death of the Dictator as the restoration of the republic. But the conspirators had made no adequate provision for carrying on the government, and Cicero soon felt that his hopes were doomed to disappointment. Bitterly chagrined by the disorderly scenes that followed, he retired once more to the country,¹ and in July, B.C. 44, set out for a journey to Greece, but, changing his plans in consequence of better news from Rome, he returned to the city in the following month. The chief power was now in the hands of the surviving consul, Mark Antony, whose principal rival was Octavianus (afterwards the Emperor Augustus), Cæsar's adopted son.² Cicero appeared again in the Senate and began his celebrated series of orations against Antony with the First Philippic (Sept. 2). Once more he took an active part in politics, apparently assuming his old position as leader, and speaking with all the charm and effectiveness of his earlier days. But he had fallen upon evil times; arms could no longer yield to the gown, and it soon became clear that there could be no peace except by the complete victory of a single aspirant for the supremacy.

Octavianus at first joined with the Senate against Antony, but he soon broke with the constitutional authorities, and, in B.C. 43, formed with Antony and Lepidus the coalition known as the Second Triumvirate. A merciless proscription at once began. Octavianus had every reason to be grateful to Cicero, but he was of a cold and ungenerous nature, and when Antony demanded his death he made no objection. Cicero's name was accordingly placed on the list of proscribed citizens. Cicero was at this time at his Tusculan villa. He made a half-hearted attempt to escape from Italy, but was overtaken near his villa at Formiæ by the soldiers of the triumvirs, and met his death with firmness (Dec. 7, B.C. 43). Antony satisfied his hatred by indignities to the mangled remains.

The career of Cicero is a remarkable example of a sudden rise, followed by an utter collapse and fall. His rise was the natural result of his own ability, industry, and ambition; his fall was as naturally caused by his defects, coupled with his good qualities, — a mixture that produced a certain weakness of character. Had he been less timid or less scrupulous, or, on the other hand, had he been more far-sighted, he might have remained on the pedestal to which he was proud to have raised himself and on which he was ambitious to stand. But the times needed a different kind of man, and others, far less worthy, but able and willing to cope with the contending forces in the state, supplanted him. One quality was particularly instrumental both in his rise and his fall. He excelled in forcible and witty abuse. He dearly loved a bitter jest, and he lived among a people that were constitutionally inclined to abusive language. No doubt it was this talent for invective that made him popular when it happened to be directed in accordance with the people's taste. But it also alienated his friends, and embittered his enemies. He was called a Scurra and a Cynic, and it was perhaps a pun that cost him the favor of Octavianus; certainly it was his abuse of Antony and Fulvia that cost him his life. But he was the first orator of all time, a literary worker of the rarest gifts, and according to his lights a lover and servant of the state.

The following list gives the titles and subjects of all of Cicero's orations (except fragments) which have survived:

B.C. 81. Pro P. QUINCTIO : Defence of Quinctius in a prosecution by Sex. Nævius, to recover the profits of a partnership in some land in Gaul, inherited from his brother C. Quinctius.

B.C. 80. Pro SEX. ROSCIO AMERINO : Defence of Roscius on a charge of parricide brought by Erucius as professional prosecutor, at the instigation of Chrysogonus.

B.C. 76 (?). Pro Q. ROSCIO COMOEDO : Defence of the actor Roscius from the claim of C. Fannius Chærea to half the profits of certain lands taken as the value of a slave held by them in partnership, and killed by C. Flavius.

B.C. 72 (or 71). Pro M. TULLIO : Plea for damages for an assault made by a rival claimant on Tullius' estate.

B.C. 70. In CAECILIUM ("Divinatio") : Plea on the technical right of Cicero to conduct the prosecution against Verres.

— In C. VERREM : Impeachment of Verres for plunder and oppression in Sicily. Six Orations. — (1) The general charge ("Actio Prima"); (2) De Praetura Urbana : earlier political crimes of Verres; (3) De Iurisdictione Siciliana : his administration in Sicily; (4) De Frumento : speculation and fraud as to the supplies of grain;

(5) De Signis: the plunder of works of art; (6) De Suppliciis: cruelties of his government.

B.C. 69. Pro M. FONTEIO: Defence of Fonteius' administration of Gaul during Pompey's campaign against Sertorius, about B.C. 75.

— Pro A. CAECINA: Defence against Æbutius of Cæcina's right to an estate received by inheritance from his wife Cæsennia, widow of a rich money-lender, M. Fulcinus.

B.C. 66. Pro LEGE MANILIA, vel De IMPERIO CN. POMPEI: Defence of the proposal of Manilius to invest Pompey with the command of the war against Mithridates.

— Pro A. CLUENTIO HABITO: Defence of Cluentius against the charge of poisoning his stepfather Oppianicus, brought by the younger Oppianicus, instigated by Sassia, the mother of Cluentius.

B.C. 63. De LEGE AGRARIA: Against the Agrarian Law of Rullus. Three orations: the first delivered in the Senate and the others before the people.

— Pro C. RABIRIO: Defence of Rabirius on the charge of killing Saturninus, about B.C. 100.

— In L. CATILINAM: On the Conspiracy of Catiline. Four orations: the first and last delivered in the Senate, the second and third before the people.

— Pro L. MURENA: Defence of Murena on a charge of bribery brought by Sulpicius, the defeated candidate for the consulship. (Following previous orations on the same side by Hortensius and Crassus.)

B.C. 62. Pro P. CORNELIO SULLA: Defence of Sulla from the charge of sharing in Catiline's conspiracy.

— Pro A. LICINIO ARCHIA: Defence of the claim of the poet Archias to Roman citizenship.

B.C. 59. Pro L. VALERIO FLACCO: Defence of Flaccus on a charge of maladministration as proprætor in Asia.

B.C. 57. POST REDITUM: Thanks for Cicero's recall from exile. Two orations: (1) In Senatu; (2) Ad Quirites.

— Pro DOMO SUA: Appeal to the pontifices against the alienation of Cicero's estate by Clodius.

— De HARUSPICUM RESPONSIS: Invective against the impieties of Clodius.

B.C. 56. Pro P. SESTIO : Defence of Sestius, a partisan of Cicero, on a charge of assault, the attack having been made on Sestius by the dependants and partisans of Clodius.

— In P. VATINIUM (" Interrogatio ") : A personal attack on Vatinius, one of the witnesses against Sestius.

— Pro M. CAELIO : Defence of the character of Cælius (a dissolute young friend of Cicero) against a vindictive charge of stealing and poisoning, brought by Atratinus, at the instigation of Clodia.

— De PROVINCIIS CONSULARIBUS : Advocating the recall of Piso and Gabinius, and the retaining of Cæsar in the proconsulate of Gaul.

— Pro CORNELIO BALBO : Defence of Balbus (a citizen of Gades) in his right of Roman citizenship, granted by Pompey.

B.C. 55. In L. CALPURNIUM PISONEM : Retaliation for an attack made by Piso after his return from the proconsulate of Macedonia.

B.C. 54. Pro CN. PLANCIO : Defence of Plancius on the charge of corrupt political bargaining, brought by M. Junius Laterensis, the defeated candidate for ædile.

— Pro C. RABIRIO POSTUMO : Defence of Rabirius, in a prosecution to recover money alleged to have been received from Ptolemy, King of Egypt, in corrupt partnership with Gabinius.

B.C. 52. Pro T. ANNIO MILONE : Defence of Milo on the charge of the murder of Clodius.

B.C. 46. Pro M. MARCELLO : Speech of thanks to Cæsar for the pardon of Marcellus.

— Pro Q. LIGARIO : Petition of pardon for Ligarius, charged with conducting the war in Africa against Cæsar.

B.C. 44-43. In M. ANTONIUM : Orationes Philippicæ XIV.—

B.C. 44. (1) (Sept. 2) Reply to an invective of Antony : exhortation to the consuls Antony and Dolabella ; (2) Reply to a bitterer invective : a review of Antony's public and private life ; (3) (Dec. 20) Urging the support of Octavianus (Augustus) and D. Brutus against Antony, now in Hither Gaul ; (4) (Dec. 20) Exposition to the people of the acts of the Senate, and praise of D. Brutus, B.C. 43 ; (5) (Jan.

1) Protest against treating with Antony : he should be declared a public enemy ; (6) (Jan. 4) Appeal to the people : the embassy to Antony would be in vain ; (7) (end of January) Protest against those who clamored for peace : Antony must not be suffered to escape ; (8) (February) The war against Antony is iustum bellum : his partisans should be required to submit before the 1st of March ; (9) (February) Eulogy of Sulpicius, who had died while on the mission to Antony ; (10) (February) Thanks to Pansa, and praise of M. Brutus ; (11) (about March) That Asia should be assigned to Cassius, to conduct the war against Trebonius ; (12) (about March) Declining to serve, with P. Servilius, on an embassy to Antony ; (13) (March 20) There can be no peace with Antony : praise of Sex. Pompey ; (14) (April 22) Thanksgiving proposed, and honors to the dead, after the defeat of Antony at Bononia.

II. ROMAN ORATORY.

FROM the earliest times of which we have historical knowledge, up to the establishment of the Empire as the result of Civil War, the constitution of Rome was republican, in so far that all laws were passed and all magistrates elected by a vote of all the citizens. The principle of "representation," however, which to us seems inseparable from republican institutions, was unknown to the Romans. All laws were passed, and all officers were elected, at what we should call a mass meeting of the entire body of citizens, convened at the central seat of government. The absence of newspapers, also, made a distinct difference between ancient political conditions and those of our own times. Conversation and public addresses were the only means of disseminating political ideas. And even the scope of public addresses was much limited; for meetings could be called by a magistrate only, and could be addressed by only such persons as the presiding magistrate would permit. Obviously, under such a régime, public speaking, which even now has a distinct potency in state affairs, must have been far more efficacious as a political instrument than it is to-day.

To this must be added the fact that under Roman polity the only means of social advancement was success in a political career. The Senate, the Roman peerage,¹ consisted practically only of persons who had been elected to one or more of the three graded magistracies, quæstorship, prætorship, consulship (the cursus honorum).² Hence every ambitious Roman, of high or low estate, had to become a politician and follow the regular course of office-holding. The curule magistrates were at once generals, judges, and statesmen. To achieve success, therefore, a politician had to show ability in all of these directions. Occasionally, to be sure, a man succeeded by virtue of a single talent, — like Marius, who owed his advancement solely to his valor and military skill; but such instances were rare. Next to military fame, the strongest recommendation to the favor of the people was oratorical ability. Then, as now, the orator's power to move the multitude in public affairs was the readiest means of advancement. Further, political prosecutions, and private suits prompted by political motives, were of the commonest occurrence, and these afforded an eloquent advocate abundant opportunity to make himself known and to secure the favor of large bodies of supporters. Again, the Senate was a numerous and somewhat turbulent body, always more or less divided in a partisan sense; and, though it had no legislative functions, it still exercised a very strong influence on politics. To be able to sway this large assembly by force of oratory was of great moment to an aspiring Roman. Finally, though the contention for office ceased with the consulship, there still continued among the consulares, who formed almost a distinct class in society and public life, a vehement rivalry to be regarded as the leading man in the state. For all these reasons, the art of oratory was perhaps more highly esteemed and of greater practical value in the later period of the Roman Republic than at any other time in the history of the world.³

But even from the very establishment of the commonwealth, oratory was highly prized, and Cicero gives a long roll of distinguished orators from the First Secession of the Plebs (B.C. 494) to his own time. The most eminent of those whose art was still uninfluenced by Greek rhetoric, was Cato the Censor (died B.C. 149), who may be called the last of the natural Roman orators. His speeches are lost, but more than a hundred and fifty of them were known to Cicero, who praises them as acutae, elegantes, facetæ, breves.

It was in Cato's lifetime that the introduction of Greek art and letters into Rome took place; and oratory, like all other forms of literature, felt the new influence at once. The oration, though still valued most for its effectiveness, soon came to be looked on as an artistic work as well. The beginning of this tendency is seen in Ser. Sulpicius Galba (consul B.C. 144) and M. Lepidus (consul B.C. 137). Galba, in the words of Cicero, "was the first of the Latins to employ the peculiar arts of the orator,—digressions to introduce ornament, the art of captivating the minds of his hearers, of moving them with passion, of exaggerating a case, of appealing to pity, and the art of introducing commonplaces."¹ It was in Lepidus, however, that the full effect of Greek art first manifested itself, not to such a degree as to destroy originality, but sufficiently to foster native talent and develop a truly national school of speaking. Cicero, who had many of his orations, declares that he was "the first Roman orator to show Greek smoothness and the unity of the period."² His influence was particularly felt by C. Papirius Carbo (consul B.C. 120), the best advocate of his time, Tiberius Gracchus, the illustrious tribune, and Caius Gracchus, his younger brother. Of the last mentioned, Cicero speaks with great admiration as a man "of surpassing genius" and of unequalled excellence, whose early death was a heavy loss to Latin literature.¹

In the generation immediately preceding Cicero, in which oratory was enthusiastically cultivated and carried to a high pitch of perfection, two figures tower above all others, Marcus Antonius (the grandfather of Mark Antony) and L. Crassus. Both were Cicero's masters in his youth,² and he finds it hard to prefer one to the other; but, on the whole, he seems to regard Crassus as the greater orator. "The lofty earnestness and dignity of his nature were relieved by the brightest humor and the wittiest vein of genius. His diction was as choice and elegant as it was free and unaffected, and with the mastery of tasteful exposition he united the clearest logical development of thought."³

Crassus appears in the De Oratore as the exponent of Cicero's own views of the aim, function, appointments, and preparation of the orator. To Crassus the orator was no mere handicraftsman, confined to manipulating juries and popular assemblies, but statesman and philosopher as well, requiring for his equipment all the knowledge that could be gained on the highest subjects that interest mankind. He was himself familiar with all the ancient systems of philosophy as expounded by the wise from Plato to Diodorus, and had discussed the nature and functions of oratory with the philosophers of his time in person at Athens. This ideal of the orator, contrasted with Cato's definition vir bonus dicendi peritus, shows the advance of the art as such between the earliest times and those of Cicero.

Yet in the Roman orations, addressed as they were to an intensely practical people, matter had always been more attended to than manner, effective force than artistic elegance. Even Cicero himself, in his public addresses, conceals, and even disparages, his knowledge of Greek art, philosophy, and literature. But in his time the study of oratory as an art began to be pursued for a definite end, — the acquiring of a distinct style. And in this study two different styles offered themselves to the choice of the aspiring young Roman, — namely, the Asiatic and the Attic.

The precise difference between the two styles cannot be exactly determined; but from the middle of the first century B.C., both were advocated and practised by enthusiastic partisans in a controversy like that between realism and romanticism, or Wagnerism and classicism.

It would seem, in a general way, that Atticism stood for directness, force, and naturalness, while Asiaticism (or Asianism) represented display and affectation in all its forms. Cicero says in one place,¹ "The styles of Asiatic oratory are two, — one epigrammatic and pointed, full of fine ideas which are not so weighty and serious as neat and graceful; the other with not so many sententious ideas, but voluble and hurried in its flow of language, and marked by an ornamented and elegant diction." From these hints, as well as from the practice of imperial times (in which this style had full sway), we may gather that the "Asiatic" orators sought the applause of the audience and a reputation for smartness, and were overstrained and artificial.²

About Cicero's time a reaction had set in, and a school had arisen which called itself Attic, and attempted to return to the simplicity of Xenophon and Lysias. But in avoiding the Eastern exaggeration, it had fallen into a meagreness and baldness very different from the direct force of Demosthenes. Probably this tendency was really no more sincere than the other, for both styles alike aimed to excite the admiration of the hearer rather than to influence his mind or feelings by the effective presentation of ideas.

Hortensius, the great contemporary and rival of Cicero, was a special example of the Asiatic school. He was a somewhat effeminate person, with a dandified air both in composition and delivery. "His voice," we read, "was resonant and sweet, his motions and gestures had even more art than is suitable for an orator."¹

The extreme Attic school was represented by C. Licinius Calvus.² "Though he handled his style with knowledge and good taste," writes Cicero, "yet being too critical of himself, and fearing to acquire unhealthy force, he lost even real vitality. Accordingly, his speaking, repressed by too great scrupulousness, was brilliant to the learned and those who listened to him attentively, but by the crowd and the Forum it was swallowed like a pill."³

It is important to settle Cicero's own position in this contest. He himself fancied that he followed the true and best form of Atticism. We see by his oratorical works that his ideas were formed on the best models; that he was familiar with all the rhetorical systems of the Greeks of the best period, and fully appreciated all the excellencies of the earlier Roman orators, as well as the simplicity and directness of Demosthenes. But taste had declined, and everything had to be overdone to satisfy the public. Cicero seems to have taken a middle course, following the style of the Rhodian school, a branch or outgrowth of the Asiatic, with strong Attic tendencies. It professed to abhor the luxuriance and affectation of Asianism and to aim at the old directness and true feeling; but Cicero was assailed in his own time for exaggeration, false pathos, and artificial rhetoric, such as were characteristic of Asianism. Nor could we expect anything else. He could not restore a style which the age could not appreciate, nor rise to a height for which his native genius was insufficient. With him, however, Latin oratory reached the acme of its development.

Immediately after Cicero, came the Empire with its suppression of free thought, and in this the extreme style of Asiatic exaggeration and posing became the rage. Many literary men endeavored to stem this tide, but in vain. The younger Pliny attempted to take Cicero as his model, but the only oration of his that we possess is merely a fulsome rhetorical exercise. Quintilian wrote a treatise on the education of the orator, full of sound learning and good sense. Oratory was the favorite study of all literary men, and even emperors entered the lists to contend for pre-eminence. But "art for art's sake" had become the aim in literature generally; and oratory, now divorced from real feeling, could not but end in affected brilliancy and false emotion, such as mark all we know of later Roman work.

Before the Romans came into contact with Greek oratory, that art had been reduced to a very elaborate and even pedantic science. All the principles by which a public speaker could proceed had been formulated into rules which even to this day, with or without the speaker's knowledge, guide all discussion. Without going into the minute details of the system, one may well notice the scientific principles which had been carefully mastered by Cicero, and which formed the basis of his skill as an orator.

Naturally the first matter to be attended to was the settlement of the question at issue (constitutio causae). As the ancient science of rhetoric had to do with discourse of every kind, all questions that might arise were divided into two classes: those whose discussion was directed to acquiring knowledge merely (quaestiones cognitionis), and those directed to determining what action should be taken as the result of the enquiry (quaestiones actionis). With the former we have nothing to do here. They are confined to philosophical discussion only, and the orations of Cicero are all on practical subjects.

The practical questions included under the quaestiones actionis were of several different kinds: they might be judicial questions coming before some form of court (genus iudiciale); they might be deliberative and come before an assembly or senate (genus deliberativum); or they might be questions of praise or blame in reference to some particular person or act not under judicial investigation (genus demonstrativum). The last class would include eulogies and the like.

The oration itself had also its divisions, which were established particularly in regard to the genus iudiciale as the most important of the three kinds. The exordium contained necessary preliminary remarks and the approach to the subject. The narratio gave the facts on which the argument was founded. The propositio was the statement of the theme or view to be maintained, and often contained a partitio or division of the proposition. The argumentatio embraced the confirmatio or arguments for the main thesis, and the confutatio (refutatio) or refutation of real or supposed arguments of the opponent. The address ended with the peroratio, the place for such application of the argument, or appeal to the hearers, or general remarks, as were suitable to the occasion. Naturally, as the art of speaking came before the science, and was at all times more or less free from scientific trammels, these divisions could not well cover the whole ground, and each of them was accordingly subdivided into several smaller parts, which varied according to the character of the oration. Thus the exordium contained a principium and an insinuatio (the suggestions to be made in order to gain the favorable attention of the hearer), and all the various forms of proof had their place as well as their names in the confirmatio. Even the main divisions are not all clearly marked, but generally they can be made out in Cicero's speeches. For examples, see the summary and the running analysis of each oration in the notes.

With the same particularity were the necessary duties of the orator divided, and furnished each with its technical name: inventio, the gathering of material; dispositio, the arrangement; elocutio, the suitable expression in language; memoria, the committing to memory; actio, the delivery. Under each of these, again, was a body of lore with its technical phrases. Elocutio embraced the whole doctrine of what we should call style, and the use of all rhetorical devices, ornaments (lumina), and forms of speech. So that no science was ever more completely digested and labelled than this of oratory.

Of the orations in the present edition, Roscius, Verres, and Archias belong purely to the genus iudiciale; the Manilian Law and the four Orations against Catiline belong to the genus deliberativum.

III. CICERO AS AN ORATOR.

CICERO'S success as an orator was due more than anything else to his skill in effectively presenting the strong points of a case and cleverly covering the weak ones. For this he had extraordinary natural talents, increased by very diligent study and practice, and never, even in his greatest success, did he relax the most careful study of his cases to this end. Attention is called throughout the notes to his felicities in this branch of his art, which, because it is not strictly literary, is likely to be overlooked, and all the more because such art must always be carefully concealed. It is sufficient, however, to call attention to it here generally, referring the student to the notes for details.

On the literary side of oratory, Cicero's only rival is Demosthenes, to whom he is superior in everything except moral earnestness and the power that comes from it, a quality which belongs to the man rather than the orator. Teuffel (Gesch. der Röm. Lit.) ascribes to him an extraordinary activity of intellect, a lively imagination, quickness and warmth of feeling, a marvellous sense of form, an inexhaustible fertility of expression, an incisive and diverting wit, with the best physical advantages. As to his "form," he speaks of it as "clear, choice, clean, copious, appropriate, attractive, tasteful, and harmonious." The whole range of tones from light jest even to tragic vehemence was at his command, and especially did he excel in an appearance of conviction and emotion, which he increased by an impassioned delivery. Of course he is not always at his best, but it is never safe to criticise his compositions without a careful study of the practical necessities of the occasion.

Thus Cicero's style is often criticised as redundant and tautological, a criticism which must proceed either from ignorance or inattention. One of the great arts of the public speaker is to keep before his audience a few points in such a way that they cannot be lost sight of. To accomplish this, these points must be repeated as many times as possible, but with such art that the fact of repetition shall not be noticed. Hence the same thing must often be said again and again, or else dwelt upon with a profusion of rhetoric, in order to allow time for the idea to gain a lodgement. It was to this art that the late Rufus Choate owed his success as an advocate, though the literary critic would fain reduce his speeches to one-half their length. Literary tautology is in fact a special oratorical virtue. A spoken word you hear but once unless it is repeated, and there are things which have to be heard many times before they can have their effect.

Again, apart from "repetitional" tautology, it must be remembered that the Latin language was in a sense a rude tongue, lacking in nice distinctions. Such distinctions must be wrought out by a long-continued effort to express delicate shades of thought. Hence it often becomes necessary in Latin to point the exact signification of a word or phrase capable of several meanings, either by contrasting it with its opposite, or else by adding another word which has an equally general meaning, but which, like a stereoscopic view, gives the other side of the same idea, and so rounds out and limits the vagueness of the first. Thus the two together often produce as refined distinctions as any language which has a larger and more precise vocabulary.

In the oration for the Manilian Law (i. 3), for instance, we have singulari eximiaque virtute. Here singulari might mean simply odd (not found in others). This of itself is not necessarily a compliment any more than peculiar is in English, but when Cicero adds eximia the two words together convey the idea that the virtus is not only peculiar to Pompey, but exemplary and of surpassing merit. At the same time the two words allow the orator to dwell longer on a point that he wishes to emphasize.

In the same oration (v. 12) the words periculum et discrimen occur. In a treatise on synonyms it would be impossible to distinguish between these two, because each is very often used for the other with precisely the same meaning. But when the two are used together, as in this passage, they are not tautological, as would at first appear to a microscopic critic. The first refers to the immediate moment of doubt, the question whether it (the salus) shall be preserved or not; the second, to the ultimate decisive moment, which determines that doubt and finally decides. In English we should ordinarily put the whole into one (modified) idea, and say "most dangerous crisis," or the like. But the Latin has a habit of dividing the two parts of an idea and stating each separately. Hence we have the figure that we call hendiadys, which simply means that one language, or age, states separately and co-ordinately what another language, or age, unites into one complex.

In gloriam . . . tueri et conservare (the same oration, v. 12), tueri, the first word, refers to the action of the subject, the effort to maintain; conservare, the second, to the result [to be] attained, the preservation of the glory. To complete the idea both are necessary, because from the general turn of the thought both the effort and the result are alike important. In this way the same general idea can be artfully repeated from two different points of view without the hearer's suspecting a repetition.

To such causes as these is to be attributed the frequent use of words in a manner often called tautological.

IV. LATIN AND ENGLISH STYLE.

Two differences between Latin and English prose are noticeable. Latin prose is periodic in its structure ; i.e. the main idea, instead of being expressed at once, briefly followed or preceded by its modifications, all in short detached sentences (as in English), is so put as to embrace all its modifying clauses with itself in one harmonious whole. This is also done at times in formal discourse in English, but in Latin it was the prevailing style. Though this method of presentation seems to us involved, yet it is after all only an artistic elaboration of the loose parenthetical way of speaking habitual with unlettered persons, or, in other words, it simply follows the natural processes of the human mind. But when developed it allows and stimulates an antithetic balance of thought both in sound and sense, so that each element of an idea is brought into notice by an opposing one, or is so embroidered on the level surface of the main idea or injected into it that it cannot fail to get its true effect at the instant when that effect is required.¹

If we take the opening period of the oration for Roscius (p. 2), the main clause is credo ego ; the rest of the sentence is all the object of credo in the indirect discourse. The main verb of the indirect discourse is mirari (changed from miramini), with vos in the accusative as its subject. The object of mirari is the indirect question quid sit quod, etc., embracing all the rest (changed from a direct question quid est quod, etc.). Again, the subject of sit is all that follows, being a clause with quod, of which surrexerim is the main verb and all the other clauses are modifiers. The clause cum . . . sedeant is a kind of adverbial modifier of surrexerim, while the clause qui . . . sim . . . comparandus is a kind of adjective modifier of ego the subject of surrexerim, and qui sedeant is a kind of adjective modifier of his.

Omnes hi, etc., is an independent sentence, but is connected in thought with the preceding, and explains the fact at which the jurors are supposed to be surprised, i.e. I suppose you wonder, etc., but the fact is, etc.

In another sentence, the beginning of the Manilian Law, we have a good example of the antithetic balancing of one word or clause against another which marks the Latin periodic style. The sentence consists of two parts,—the first concessive, introduced by quamquam; the second adversative, introduced by tamen. So, in the first, conspectus balances locus, which is brought into relief by autem ("and again"); while ad agendum amplissimus and ad dicendum ornatissimus are balanced in like manner against each other. In the second part, the relative clause qui . . . patuit (virtually concessive) is, as usual, embodied in the main clause, bringing the relative as near as possible to its antecedent aditu; voluntas and rationes are set in antithesis by sed; while the main verb, prohibuerunt, comes last as usual. The logical form of the whole is, "Though political speaking has its advantages, yet I have been prevented," etc.

By stating first the leading thought (hoc aditu, etc.), and putting the verb at the end, Latin is able to make the main clause active, thus partly disguising the art of the antithesis. Here, as elsewhere, it is of great help in reading to observe these two rules: (1) that Latin puts first the main idea, the key to the whole; and (2) that it constantly deals in antitheses, often forcing them when they do not naturally occur (as in amplissimus and ornatissimus), each thought or expression having its pendant, like ornaments which go in pairs.

The second main difference between Latin and English prose style is that in English the emphasis gravitates towards the end, while in Latin the more emphatic word always comes first. This is not, like the corresponding usage in English, a mere tendency, but a universal practice, which can be and is managed by the writer with exquisite skill, so that a Latin prose sentence bears on its face its own emphasis, giving the same effect to the eye that the best reader or speaker in English can to the ear.

Thus the first paragraph of the oration for Roscius (above cited) shows its emphasis as follows: "I SUPPOSE (conceding something he will presently contradict or explain) YOU (who do not, as I do, know or think of the state of things) wonder why it is that, etc., but the fact is (implied as the antithesis of the emphatic credo)," etc. Again, omnes is emphatic, i.e. "I am not the only one, but all would speak were it not for circumstances," which he proceeds to mention. Even videtis has an emphatic position: "who, as you see, are in attendance." Again, putant oportere defendi, i.e. "THINK (though they do nothing) ought to be averted by a defence, but to make the defence themselves," etc.

If we take the beginning of the oration for Milo, there is the same artistic arrangement: "Though I am AFRAID,¹ gentlemen, that it is not quite BECOMING, when I get up to speak for a very brave man, to be alarmed, and that it is particularly unbecoming, when TITUS ANNIUS himself is more alarmed for the welfare of the state than for his own, that I in his case cannot show an equally lofty spirit, nevertheless this strange form of a strange court terrifies me as I gaze on it, for wherever my eyes fall they miss the customary appearance of the Forum and the old established style of courts."

It is only by attention to this feature of Latin style that the full force of the author, with all the implications, connotations, and hints, can be clearly seen.

¹ As we might say, "I am afraid you won't like it, but I have done so and so."

V. DELIVERY.

THE delivery of a Latin oration was marked by a fire and force of which we have small conception. Though the Romans were an extremely dignified and formal race, yet beneath the surface they had all the violent emotions which we in modern times associate with the Mediterranean nations. The actio or delivery occupies one of the first places in ancient treatises on oratory (actio in dicendo una dominatur, de Or. III, lvi, 213). The range of expressed emotion was much wider than is usual with us, not only in pitch of voice and inflection of tone, but also in bodily activity, sometimes going beyond what the best orators of the time regarded as becoming. Violent movements of the arms, stamping of the feet, changes of position, gestures of the whole body, so that sometimes the knee would touch the ground, were not infrequent. The Latin language, however, did not have that violent and sudden stress with which we are familiar, and on which we depend for spasmodic force. It had instead a more sustained and singing tone, capable of infinite variations. The syllabic accent, too, was very slight, and almost merged in a kind of rhythmic ictus depending on the quantity of the syllables.

Hence particular attention was paid to the numerus, or succession of long and short syllables, so as to give, along with varying tones of emphasis, an agreeable musical cadence which is foreign to the spirit of most modern languages. The most emphatic words were indicated by an intensity of tone throughout, as in modern music, and the less emphatic, coming at the end, were pronounced with a full, orotund utterance, so as to round out the period, but with a descending stress rather than with a rising one such as we have in English. Such a close as tēmēritās fili cōmprōbāvīt was regarded as especially effective. So quī ēiūsdem hōmīnis sīt quī īmprōbōs prōbēt prōbōs īmprōbārē is praised by Cicero as an ideal cadence.

VI. THE ROMAN CONSTITUTION.

IN the time of Cicero the Roman "State" had technically a republican constitution, that is, every citizen had a share in the government. But not every citizen had an equal share, partly from fixed constitutional principles, and partly from differentiations in social prominence which affected constitutional rights.

I. CITIZENSHIP AND ORDERS IN THE STATE.

Accordingly there were among Roman citizens three social (and in a manner political) ranks (ordines): the Senatorial Order (ordo senatorius), the Equestrian Order (ordo equestris), and the People (populus, in the narrower sense). The first two of these made up the Roman aristocracy.

I. SENATORIAL ORDER. — The Ordo Senatorius was strictly speaking only another name for the Senate, the members of which, by virtue of their life tenure of office, their privileges and insignia, and their esprit de corps, formed a kind of Peerage. The list of Senators, regularly numbering 300, was in early times made up by the Censors at their discretion from among those who had held high magistracies. But after the reforms of Sulla (B.C. 80) every person who had held the quæstorship — the lowest grade of the regular magistracy (see below, p. lix) — was lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate. This aristocracy was therefore an official or bureaucratic class. Their number fluctuated, running up to five or six hundred.

Nobility, however, did not really depend on holding offices oneself, but on being descended from an ancestor who had held a curule office.¹ When any person not so descended was chosen a magistrate, he was called a novus homo,² and, though he of course became a member of the Senatorial Order, he was not regarded as a noble. His posterity, however, would belong to the nobility. But such instances were very uncommon; for the Senate and the magistrates had such control over the elections that it was very difficult for any person not already a member of the nobility to be chosen to any office entitling him to enter the Senate. Hence the Senatorial Order and the Nobility were practically identical, and "new men" became necessarily identified with the class to which their posterity would belong, rather than that from which they themselves had come. This double relation of Cicero—a member of the Senate, but sprung from the Equestrian Order—goes a great way to explain what is inconsistent and vacillating in his political career.

II. EQUESTRIAN ORDER. — The title Equites was originally applied to the members of the eighteen centuries equitum equo publico under the Servian constitution, to whom a horse was assigned by the state, together with a certain sum of money yearly for its support, and who constituted the old Roman cavalry. Those who served equo publico had to have the equestrian census,¹ i.e. possess a fortune of 400,000 sesterces ($20,000); and the horses were assigned by the Censors, as a rule, to the young men of senatorial families. These centuriæ equitum were therefore composed of young noblemen. When they entered the Senate, they were (in the later years of the republic) obliged to give up the public horse. Therefore, on becoming Senators, they voted in the centuries of the first class, not with the Equites (see p. lv, below). This aristocratic body had, however, long before Cicero's time, ceased to serve in the field; they formed a parade corps (somewhat like the Royal Guards in England), from which active officers of the legion, tribuni militum, were taken.²

During the time that the equites equo publico still served in the field as cavalry, another body grew up by their side, consisting of equites equo privato: that is, persons of the equestrian census (having a property of 400,000 sesterces), who had not received a horse from the state, but who volunteered with horses of their own. This body consisted mainly of young men of wealth who did not belong to noble (that is, senatorial) families. No very distinct line was, however, drawn between the two classes until the Lex Iudiciaria of C. Gracchus (B.C. 123), which prescribed that the iudices should not, as heretofore, be taken from the Senators (see p. lxxv), but from those who possessed the equestrian census, and at the same time were not members of the Senate. This law did not formally exclude nobles who were not members of the Senate; but the entire body of nobility was so far identified in spirit and interest with the Senate, that an antagonism immediately grew up between them and this new judicial class. A principal cause of the antagonism was that members of the Senate were prohibited from being engaged in any trade or business; while, as has been shown above, the Senate, by its control over the elections, virtually filled its own vacancies, of course from the ranks of the nobility. Hence, as rich men of non-senatorial families were excluded from a political career, and so from the nobility, while Senators were excluded from a business life, there were formed during the last century of the republic two powerful aristocracies, — the nobles, or Senatorial Order, a governing aristocracy of rank, and the Equestrian Order, an aristocracy of wealth, corresponding to the moneyed aristocracy of our day. The name Ordo Equestris was given to the latter body because its members possessed the original equestrian census: that is, that amount of property which would have entitled them to a public horse. From the ranks of the nobility were taken the oppressive provincial governors: the Equestrian Order, on the other hand, furnished the publicani, the equally oppressive tax-gatherers.

² When the Roman equites ceased to serve as cavalry, troops of horse were demanded of the allies; and in the time of Cæsar we find that the Roman legion consisted exclusively of infantry, the cavalry being made up of such auxiliaries.

The Equestrian Order, Ordo Equestris, is therefore not merely distinct from the centuriæ equitum, but strongly contrasted with them. The former is the wealthy middle class, the latter are the young nobility. The term equites is sometimes applied to both indiscriminately, although the strictly correct term for the members of the Equestrian Order was iudices.

III. POPULUS. — Below these two aristocratic orders, in estate and so in social position, were all the rest of the free-born citizens not possessing a census of 400,000 sesterces. Among these there was naturally great variety in fortune, cultivation, and respectability; but they all had a status superior to that of the libertini (freedmen) and the foreign residents. It was this third class which was under the control of the tribuni plebis and which by its turbulence brought on all the disturbances which ultimately resulted in the overthrow of the republic. It must not be supposed, however, that these humbler citizens were debarred from political preferment except by their want of money, and in fact many of them rose to positions of wealth and influence.

The populus (in the narrower sense) was often confounded with the plebs, but in reality the distinction between the plebs and the patricians was in Cicero's time historical rather than political. The patricians had been originally a privileged class of hereditary nobility, entirely different from the later senatorial nobility; but only a few patrician families remained, and these, though still proud of their high birth, had no special privileges and had been practically merged in the Senatorial Order. Opposed to the patricians had been originally the plebs, a class of unknown origin (probably foreign residents) destitute of all political rights. These had gradually, in the long controversies of the earlier Republican times, acquired all the rights and privileges of full citizens, and a majority of the Senatorial and Equestrian Orders were of plebeian origin. In time plebs in an enlarged sense and populus in its narrower acceptation had become synonymous, meaning the "third estate" or, in other words, all citizens not Senators or equites. Officially, however, Populus (in its wider sense) includes all Roman citizens.¹

ROMAN CITIZENSHIP. — Roman citizenship, like all rights that have grown up in a long period of time, included many minute details. The important points, however, may be included under two heads: (i) political rights, including those of voting (ius suffragii) and holding office (ius honorum), and (ii) civil rights, especially those securing personal freedom by the right of appeal (ius provocationis), etc., and by other privileges limiting the arbitrary power of magistrates (see remarks on the imperium, p. lviii, below). Among the civil rights were those of trade (commercii), intermarriage (connubii), making a will (testamenti), and others, which, though affecting the status of a man before the law, were unimportant in comparison with the great political and civil privileges first mentioned. Full citizens of Rome (cives optimo iure) enjoyed not only all the civil rights referred to, but also the ius suffragii et honorum; but many persons, not cives optimo iure, had important civil rights without being entitled to vote or hold office. The ius provocationis was especially sought after by foreigners as affording a powerful protection all over the world in times when the rights of common humanity were scantily recognized.

ITALIAN TOWNS. — Roman citizenship was originally restricted to the inhabitants of the city and a small amount of adjacent territory. But as Rome enlarged her boundaries the rights of citizenship were extended, in different degrees, to the conquered Italians.

A native Italian town which lost its original independence and was absorbed in the Roman state, ceased to be a separate civitas, and became a municipium; its citizens now possessed Roman citizenship as well as that of their own town. This Roman citizenship was possessed in various degrees. Some municipia lost all rights of self-government, without receiving any political rights at Rome in their place: that is, their political existence was extinguished, and their citizens became mere passive citizens of Rome, with civil rights, but no political ones. A second class of towns retained their corporate existence, with the right of local self-government, but without the Roman franchise. The condition thus established was called ius Caeritum, because the Etruscan town of Cære was taken as the type. The most favored class of municipia retained all powers of self-government, with magistrates of their own election, at the same time being full citizens of Rome. If, as happened in many cases, colonists were sent from Rome (or Latium) to occupy the conquered territory, these retained their full Roman citizenship though living at a distance from the city. Thus a class of towns called coloniae, possessing special privileges, grew up.

After the Social War, which resulted (B.C. 90) in giving full Roman citizenship to the inhabitants of all the Italian towns not already enjoying it, there were practically but three classes of such towns: coloniae, municipia, and praefecturae. There was no longer any real distinction between the coloniae and the municipia, though the former were looked upon with more respect. The praefecturae, however, had not full rights of self-government, for the administration of justice was in the hands of prefects (praefecti) sent from the capital.

PROVINCIALS. — The foreign conquests of Rome were organized as fast as possible as provinces (provinciae). The native inhabitants of these would not be Roman citizens at all, unless citizenship, usually of the lowest grade, was specially conferred upon them. Thus St. Paul was a free-born citizen of Tarsus, for his father had in some way secured the lesser Roman citizenship, which conferred civil rights but did not carry with it the right of suffrage or any other political privileges (see p. liii, above).

FREEDMEN. — Besides the free-born citizens (ingenui), the Roman state included a large class of libertini or freedmen. Manumitted slaves became citizens, but their exact status was a standing subject of controversy in politics. In Cicero's time they voted in the four city tribes, though there had been various attempts to make them eligible for membership in all the tribes so that their suffrages might count for more (see under Assemblies, p. lv, below). Throughout the history of the republic, there was a constant tendency to extend the suffrage, in spite of the efforts of the upper classes.

The government of this complex assemblage of citizens was in the hands of a still more complex system of magistrates and assemblies. As in our own day, we must distinguish the Legislative, the Executive, and the Judicial, though these various branches of the state authority were not so scrupulously kept separate as with us.

II. THE PUBLIC ASSEMBLIES.

The Legislative (or law-making) power proper resided in the Public Assemblies (comitia). There were, in Cicero's time, two principal assemblies, both of them having as their basis the thirty-five local tribes into which the whole people were divided for administrative purposes.

I. COMITIA CENTURIATA. — The Comitia Centuriata, or great comitia, was the military organization of Servius Tullius endowed with new political powers at the foundation of the republic. Later it was reorganized upon the basis of the thirty-five tribes. There is no precise statement as to either the time or the manner of this reorganization. It must, however, have taken place between the First and Second Punic Wars, and, according to one theory, was carried out in the following manner. The old division of the people into five classes (according to wealth)¹ being retained, for each tribe there were now formed two centuries of each class, one of seniores (above 45), one of iuniores, making in all 350 centuries. To these were added 18 centuries of equites (the young men of senatorial families, see p. li), guilds of smiths, carpenters, hornblowers, and trumpeters, and a century of freedmen and capite censi (those who had no property) — 373 in all. Each century had one vote, determined by the majority of its voters. These comitia were regularly presided over by the consul; they elected all the higher magistrates, and had full power of making laws, as well as jurisdiction in criminal cases so far as this had not been transferred to the Quaestiones Perpetuae.²

II. COMITIA TRIBUTA. — Legislation had, before Cicero's time, however, practically passed into the hands of the tribal assembly (Comitia Tributa). There were two distinct assemblies which passed under this name :

(a) The Comitia Tributa proper, an assembly of the entire people according to the thirty-five tribes (each tribe having one vote), which elected the inferior magistrates (curule ædile, quæstor, etc.), and was presided over by the prætor.

(b) The far more important tribal assembly of the plebeians exclusively, presided over by the Tribune of the People. Strictly speaking, this latter was not comitia, inasmuch as it was not composed of the whole people, populus, — the patricians being excluded from it. But these were now reduced to a few noble families, whose members would not have cared to take part in this democratic assembly even if they had been permitted; and by the Hortensian Law (B.C. 287) acts of this assembly, plebiscita, had received the validity of laws. This plebeian assembly elected the plebeian magistrates (tribunes, plebeian ædiles). It was also the principal organ for making laws.

The Comitia Centuriata, which elected the higher magistrates, being originally a military organization, could only be convened outside the city, and accordingly met in the Campus Martius or parade-ground. The Comitia Tributa, however, being purely a civil assembly, usually met in the Forum, but could be convened in any suitable place.

III. COMITIA CURIATA. — A third assembly, the Comitia Curiata, more ancient than the other two, retained only certain formal functions, especially that of ceremonially investing the consuls with the imperium or military authority (see p. lviii, below).¹ It had no longer any real power or political importance. Membership in the comitia curiata was originally confined to patricians, but it is not clear whether this restriction was continued in Cicero's time.

CONTIO. — Besides these assemblies, there were meetings, theoretically for discussion, called contiones. A contio could be called by any magistrate who had a matter to lay before the people, and was held regularly in the Comitium or the Forum.² After a rogatio (proposition of a law) had been offered, such a meeting was regularly convened in order that the voters might hear the arguments on both sides. After that, on the same or a subsequent occasion, the comitia voted on the bill, Yes or No, at a regular meeting for that purpose.

III. THE SENATE.

The Roman Senate (senatus), as its name indicates, was originally the "council of elders" (cf. the Homeric βουλή γερόντων), advisers of the king. It had, therefore, strictly speaking, no authority to make laws or to enforce their execution, and its votes were simply consulta, i.e. matters agreed upon as advisable, and its power was auctoritas. When annual magistracies succeeded the regal power, this advisory function continued, but the influence of the Senate increased, and the increase went on until, in the third century B.C., this body came to be the actual (though not formal) governing power in the state, and its consulta became ordinances, by which the Senate directed the administration of the whole state, though it still had no power to pass laws, and was itself subject to the laws. The organization of a new province, for example, was an executive measure, put in force not by a law of the people, but by an ordinance of the Senate; and in this ordinance was embodied the entire authority of Rome over the province, except so far as this was defined by general laws passed by the whole people.

It will thus be seen that the Senate, though originally a "council," had by the time of Cicero absorbed a great part of the legislative as well as the executive power in the state.

For membership in the Senate, see p. I, above.

The Senate could only be called together by some magistrate regularly possessing the imperium (usually the Consul), or by the tribunes of the people (tribuni plebis): the magistrate who summoned it also presided, and laid before it (referre) the business for which it was convened. He might at this point give his own judgment. He then proceeded to ask (rogare) the Senators individually their opinions (sententiae). The order was to ask in their turns the consulares, praetorii, and aedilicii (that is, those who sat in the Senate by virtue of having held these offices respectively). It has been disputed whether the senatores peditarii—i.e. those who had held no curule office—had the ius sententiae, or right to debate. There are, however, numerous instances of their having taken part in discussion. If the annual election had already taken place,—which was usually in July, six months before the new magistrates assumed their offices,—the magistrates elect (designati) were called upon before their several classes. The princeps Senatus (see note, Cat. iii., sect. 10) was called upon first of all, when there were no consules designati. The presiding officer, however, had it in his power to vary the order, and honor or slight any Senator by calling upon him extra ordinem. For a deliberative oration, delivered in the Senate, see Catiline iv.

² For an example of an address at such a meeting see the Oration for the Manilian Law.

As the Senate was primarily a body of councillors, its business was as a rule laid before it in general terms, not in any special form for action: each Senator could, as he chose, give his judgment in full, by argument (sententiam dicere), or by simply expressing his assent to the judgment of another (verbo adsentiri). No Senator had a right to introduce any matter formally by motion, as with us, but it was possible for a Senator, when called on, to give his opinion on any subject not included in the questions referred. The vote was taken by a division (discessio), i.e. the Senators went to one side or the other of the house. When a majority had decided in favor of any sententia, it was written out in proper form by the secretaries (scribae), under the direction of the presiding magistrate, in the presence of some of its principal supporters (adesse scribundo), and promulgated. An example of a formal resolution of the Senate is contained in the last chapter of Cicero's Fourteenth Philippic.

IV. THE EXECUTIVE.

THE CONSULS. — After the expulsion of the kings, their absolute authority (imperium), both in peace and war, was vested in two Consuls (originally praetores). Gradually, however, these autocratic powers were limited by various checks, so that in one sense a Consul had no more power than the president of a modern republic. He could, it is true, do anything in his year of office without lawful question from anybody; yet, as he could be called to account at the end of his term, any violation of the constitution was extremely dangerous. Particularly was this true in regard to objections from any one of the ten tribunes.¹ The danger of transgressing this limitation was so immediate that it was rarely incurred, and practically in almost all cases the "veto" (intercessio) of a tribune was sufficient to stop any action on the part of the curule magistrates. Another limitation on the consular power came from the curious Roman arrangement of co-ordinate magistrates or "colleagues." The objection of one consul was sufficient to annul any act of the other. This principle also applied to other magistracies, so that the wheels of government could be stopped by any colleague of equal rank. To override such an objection was an act of unconstitutional violence, which, however, was often practised when public opinion could be relied on to sustain the illegal action. In practice, the two consuls either took turns in the administration (sometimes alternating month by month) or agreed upon a division of functions.

The consuls were regularly elected in July and entered upon their office on the first day of the following January. They possessed two kinds of authority, — potestas, or power in general (which all magistrates had in some degree), and imperium,² military or sovereign power, as of a general in the field. This imperium was originally exercised by the consuls, not only in the army but in the city, so that they had absolute authority of life or death; but this was limited, early in the history of the republic, by the Lex Valeria, which gave every citizen the right of appeal (ius provocacionis) to the comitia centuriata (see p. 321, below) against a sentence of capital or corporal punishment, and later by the Lex Porcia, which forbade the scourging of citizens. By the Lex Sempronia of Caius Gracchus the right of appeal in capital cases was established even against the military imperium.³ In other respects, however, the military imperium remained practically absolute, but it could not be exercised inside the walls, except by virtue of the senatus consultum, "Dent operam consules ne quid res publica detrimenti capiat," which revived the ancient powers of the consuls and was equivalent to a declaration of martial law.⁴ After the Sullan reforms (B.C. 80) the consuls did not receive the military imperium until their year of office had expired and they were about to set out for their provinces.⁵ The civil powers of the consuls were analogous to those of any chief

magistrate. Most important among them were the right to call together, consult, and preside over the Senate, and the right to convene the comitia centuriata and preside over the election of the higher curule magistrates. For the consular auspicia, see p. lxiii, below.

PRÆTORS. — Prætor was the original Italic title of the consuls, but, as the result of the agitation for the Licinian Laws, in B.C. 366, a special magistrate of that name was elected "who administered justice, a colleague of the consuls and elected under the same auspices."¹ Gradually other prætors were added, until in the time of Cicero there were eight. They were essentially judicial officers, and their functions were assigned by lot.² As curule magistrates, however, they could on occasion command armies or assist the consuls in emergencies (see Cat. iii. 5), and were assigned as proprætors to provinces abroad after their year of office.³ Like the consuls, they were regularly elected at the comitia centuriata in July and began to serve on the first of the following January.

QUÆSTORS. — The quæstors (quaestores), or public treasurers, were in Cicero's time twenty in number. Two (called quaestores urbani) had charge of the treasury and archives at Rome, while the others were assigned to the several military commanders and provincial governors, to serve as quartermasters and paymasters. The quæstors entered upon office on Dec. 5, when they drew lots to determine their respective places of service.⁴

CURSUS HONORUM. — No one could be chosen prætor until he had been quæstor, or consul until he had been prætor. These three magistracies, then, formed a career of office — the so-called cursus honorum — which it was the aim of every ambitious Roman to complete as soon as possible. To be elected quæstor a man had to be at least 30 years old,⁵ and the lowest legal ages for the prætorship and the consulship were 40 and 43 respectively. The consulship could in no case be held until three years after the prætorship. Consuls and prætors were curule magistrates, but this was not the case with the quæstor. The office of curule ædile (see below) was often held between the quæstorship and the prætorship, but it was not a necessary grade in the cursus honorum. The minimum age for this office was the twenty-seventh year.

⁴ They were originally appointed by the consuls, but in Cicero's time were elected by the comitia tributa. The practical management of the treasury was with the clerks (scribae quaestorii), as in our modern civil service. These formed a permanent and powerful corporation. Cf. Cat. iv., sect. 15 (p. 149, ll. 10, 11).

⁵ In the time of the Gracchi the age was 27.

ÆDILES. — The ædiles (from aedes, a temple) were four magistrates, who had the general superintendence of the police of the city, criminal jurisdiction with the power of imposing fines, the care of the games, public buildings, etc. They did not form a board (collegium), but were of two grades, two being necessarily plebeians, while the other two, the curule ædiles, who ranked with the higher magistrates, might be patricians. The ædileship was not a necessary step in a political career, but it was eagerly sought, between the quæstorship and the prætorship, by ambitious men, for the reason that the superintendence of the public games gave great opportunity for gaining popular favor. A certain sum was appropriated from the public treasury for these games; but an ædile who wished to rise to higher positions, and not to be thought mean, took care to add a good sum from his own pocket.¹

LICTORS, INSIGNIA, etc. — The consuls and prætors were accompanied by special officers called lictors (lictores), who were at the same time a symbol of the supreme power and the immediate ministers of the will of the magistrates. They carried a bundle of rods and an axe bound together (the fascēs),² to inflict the punishment of flogging and death according to the regular Roman mode of execution. Each consul had twelve lictors, each prætor had six. After the right of appeal was established (see p. lviii, above), the lictors did not carry the axe inside the city. Besides the "imperial" lictors, all magistrates were attended by ministers of various kinds, viatores (summoners), præcones (criers), and slaves. All the curule magistrates wore as a mark of authority the toga prætexta (white with a crimson border), and the latus clavus (or broad stripe of crimson) on the front of the tunic. As commanders of armies, they wore instead of the toga the paludamentum, a kind of cloak entirely of crimson. In fact, the majesty of the law was symbolized in the most striking manner in the case of all magistrates except the tribunes,³ who, as champions of the plebs, wore no distinguishing dress, the quæstors and the plebeian ædiles.

PROCONSULS and PROPRÆTORS. — All the magistrates so far mentioned were elected annually. When it was desired to retain the services of a consul or a prætor after his term had expired, his imperium was extended (prorogatum) by the Senate, and he was known as a proconsul or proprætor. It was only the military imperium that was thus prorogued,⁴ not the civil ⁴ Sometimes a private citizen was invested with the imperium and called proconsul (see Manil. Law, sect. 62).

power. Thus the proconsul had no authority within the city, and could not, like the consul, call together the Senate or an assembly of the people.

As the "state" grew, it became customary to commit the government of conquered provinces to proconsuls and proprætors, and to this end the prorogation of the imperium for a second year became regular. After the time of Sulla, all provinces were so governed,¹ one of his laws providing that the consuls and prætors should set out for their provinces immediately on the expiration of their term of office in the city.² No difference was made between the power of a proconsul and that of a proprætor. Both officers had the full military and civil command and were almost absolute monarchs, except for their liability to be afterwards called to account (cf. p. lvii, above). Their opportunities for plunder were almost unlimited.³ Their power, however, did not extend to the city itself, in which they were mere private citizens. Hence it often happened that a commander, on returning from his province, remained outside the city so as to retain his military imperium for some reason or other.

CENSORS. — The censors (censores) were two in number, elected from men of consular dignity (consulares), originally at a minimum interval of four years, afterwards once in five years, — the interval called a lustrum, — and holding office for eighteen months. They ranked as magistratus maiores, but did not possess the imperium, and had no power to convene either the Senate or an assembly of the people. Their functions were — (1) to inspect the registry of citizens of every class and order; (2) to punish immorality, by removal from the Senate, the equestrian centuries, or the Tribe (nota censoria, infamia, ignominia); (3) to superintend the finances (giving out contracts for collecting the revenues) and the public works. In the intervals of the censorship, these last were under the care of the ædiles (see p. lx, above). Sulla tacitly abolished the office of censor, but it was revived in the consulship of Pompey and Crassus, B.C. 70.

The property registration, of which the censors had charge, was called census, and on it depended not only taxation but the position of a citizen in the centuriæ (see p. lv, above, on the comitia centuriata). The classes under the census were divided as follows :

² This arrangement was changed by a law of Pompey (B.C. 52) which provided that five years should intervene between the magistracy and the provincial government. See Life of Cicero, p. xxiii, above.

³ Cf. Impeachment of Verres.

The census of a Roman eques was, in Cicero's time, 400,000 sesterces, and this provision was one of long standing.

TRIBUNI PLEBIS. — Side by side with the "kingly" magistrates there had arisen a class of magistrates of the people whose only privileges originally were prohibitive, but who had come to have great power in the state.

The Tribuni Plebis (or Plebi), ten in number and elected by the Comitia Tributa, were the magistrates of that portion of the people (a state within the state) known as the Plebs. The plebeians at this epoch, however, composed the whole people, with the exception of the few families of the patrician aristocracy (such gentes as the Cornelian, Julian, Æmilian, Claudian).¹ Not being technically magistrates of the city or the whole people, but only of a single class, the tribunes did not possess the imperium, but only potestas, had no real executive power, and indeed were not magistrates at all in the strict sense of the term. On the other hand, their persons were held sacred, and they had two very important and wide-reaching functions: 1. The right of interfering, ius intercedendi ("veto"), to arrest almost any act of another magistrate. (This right practically extended to a veto on legislation, elections, and ordinances of the Senate, these being all under the direction of magistrates.) 2. The right to hold the assembly of the plebs, organized by tribes. In this assembly, known as comitia tributa, the plebeian magistrates (tribunes and plebeian ædiles)² were chosen, and laws were passed, plebiscita, which of course were originally binding only upon the plebs, but which, by the Hortensian Law (B.C. 287), received the force of leges (see p. lv, above); fines were likewise imposed by this assembly.

Out of these original powers had been developed a very extensive criminal jurisdiction, which made the tribunes and ædiles the chief prosecuting officers of the republic, the tribunes acting in cases of a political character. This order of things continued until the time of Sulla, when the administration of criminal justice was entrusted to the standing courts, quaestiones perpetuae, established by him (see p. lxxv, below). But Sulla's provisions were abolished by Pompey (B.C. 70), the people fancying that the corruptions of the courts could be remedied by restoring this power to the tribunes. The tribunes also had authority to convene the Senate and bring business before it, preside, and take part in debate. These privileges they acquired very early, by irregular practice passing into custom, rather than by any special enactment.

THE AUSPICES.—The absolute continuity of the government, which was more necessary at Rome than elsewhere, on account of a kind of theocratic idea in the constitution, was secured by a curious contrivance. The "regular succession" in Roman magistrates was as rigid as later in the Church. The welfare of the state was supposed to depend upon the favor of the gods, and this could only be transferred from one officer to another by an election which was practically a religious ceremony in which both officers took part. This favor, technically known as the auspicia, would lapse unless the election and inauguration were rightly performed. The ceremony consisted in taking the auspices, a regular process of religious divination by the flight of birds, etc., according to a very antiquated ritual (see below).

AUGURS.—The magistrates alone were authorized to consult the auspices, that is, to observe the various signs by which the gods were supposed to declare their will with regard to the state. The interpretation of the auspices, however, which had been developed into an extremely technical science (ius augurium), was in the hands of a much honored body (collegium) of distinguished citizens, called augurs (augures). These were not themselves magistrates, but simply the official interpreters of the ius augurium, which they alone were supposed to know. Since all important public acts (especially the holding of the comitia) were done auspicato (i.e., under authority of the auspices), the augurs naturally came to have great political influence. Their interpretation and advice could be disregarded, but such disregard was at the risk of the magistrate and was almost sure to affect his popularity, especially if misfortune followed.¹ The augurs held office for life. Originally they had the right to fill vacancies on their board, but later such vacancies were sometimes filled by election by the people.² Cicero himself became an augur, B.C. 53.

INTERREX.—Whenever there was a suspension of legal authority, by vacancy of the chief magistracy, it was understood that the auspicia—which were regularly in possession of the magistrates—were lodged (in accordance with the most ancient custom) with the patrician members of the Senate until new magistrates should be inaugurated. The renewal of the regular order of things was begun by the patrician senators coming together and appointing one of their own number as interrex. He held office for five days, as chief magistrate of the commonwealth and possessor of the auspicia ; then he created a successor, who might hold the comitia for the election of consuls, but who usually created another successor for that purpose.

² The rule in this matter was several times changed by law.

DICTATOR. — The dictator was an extraordinary magistrate, possessing absolute power, appointed by the consuls, at the instance of the Senate, in times of great public danger. Properly he held office for but six months. The laws of appeal, and other safeguards of individual liberty, had at first no force against this magistrate. In later times (after B.C. 202) dictators were no longer appointed, but instead the Senate, when occasion arose, invested the consuls with dictatorial power.¹ Sulla, and afterwards Cæsar, revived the name and authority of the dictatorship ; but in their case the office became equivalent to absolute sovereignty, since each of them was appointed dictator for life (perpetuo). The Magister Equitum, appointed by the Dictator, stood next in command to him and also had the imperium.

V. THE COURTS.

Our division of legal business into civil and criminal, though not exactly corresponding to the Roman classification of cases as causae privatae and causae publicae, still affords the most convenient basis for an understanding of the ancient courts.

In CIVIL CASES between individual citizens as well as foreign residents, the jurisdiction, originally belonging to the king, was, on the establishment of the Republic transferred to the consuls, but in the times with which we are especially concerned, it rested with the prætors. The praetor urbanus had charge of all civil cases between Roman citizens ; the praetor peregrinus, of all civil suits to which an alien was a party. Civil processes were various and complicated, and, since none of the orations in this edition were spoken in such cases, they may be left out of account here.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION also originally rested with the king, and, later, with the magistrates (consuls, etc.) who succeeded him. But by the various laws concerning appeal, the trial of all important offences was transferred to the assemblies of the people. In accordance with its origin the jurisdiction of these bodies was always theoretically an appellant jurisdiction. The case was supposed first to be decided by the magistrate, who, having given notice (diem dicere) to the defendant (reus), brought forward a bill (rogatio) enacting the punishment. If the case was a capital one, i.e. involving the life or status of a Roman citizen, it was brought before the comitia centuriata convened by the magistrate for the purpose, and decided like any other question. It would appear that any curule magistrate as well as the tribunes could take such action. If the case involved only a fine, it was tried before the comitia tributa by an ædile or tribune.

These methods of trial were practically superseded after the time of Sulla by the establishment of the standing courts (see below). They were, however, sometimes revived, as in Cicero's own case.

It had always been competent for the people to establish a quaestio or investigation to try persons suspected of crimes (quaestiones extraordinariae). After the analogy of this proceeding, Sulla established standing courts (quaestiones perpetuae) differing from previous quaestiones only in that they were continuous instead of being appointed upon any particular occasion. It was before these that most crimes were tried.¹ Examples of such trials are found in Rosc. Am. (p. 1) and Verres (p. 26).

Such a court consisted of a presiding judge, quaesitor (praetor, or iudex quaestionis), who caused a jury (iudices) to be impanelled and sworn (hence called iurati), varying in number in the different courts and at different times, to try the case under his presidency. These iudices were drawn by lot from a standing body (iudices selecti), the exact number of which is unknown,² and a right of challenging existed as with us. This body was originally made up from the Senatorial Order, but a law of C. Gracchus (B.C. 123) provided that the iudices should be taken from non-Senators who possessed the equestrian census (see p. lxii, above). From this time the Senators and the Equites contended for the control of the courts. Sulla restored to the Senators the exclusive privilege of sitting as iudices (B.C. 80), but the Aurelian Law (B.C. 70) provided that the jurors should be taken, one-third from the Senators and two-thirds from the Equestrian Order, and that one-half of the Equites chosen (i.e. one-third of the whole number of iudices) should have held the office of Tribunus Aerarius (i.e. president of one of the thirty-five local tribes, see p. liv, above). This regulation remained in force until the dictatorship of Cæsar, B.C. 45, when this decuria of Tribuni Aerarii was abolished. A majority of the jurors decided the verdict. The president had no vote, nor did he decide the law of the case: he had merely charge of the proceedings as a presiding magistrate. (Cf. Verr. i. 32, for a hint at his powers.) Each juror wrote on his ballot A (absolvo) for acquittal or C or K (condemno) for conviction.

¹ Sulla's quaestiones perpetuae were eight or ten in number. Six of these—Repetundae (extortion), Ambitus (bribery), Peculatus (embezzlement), Maestas (treason), de Sicariis et Veneficiis (murder), and probably Falsi (counterfeiting and fraud)—were presided over by six of the eight prætors. For the other two (or four), ex-ædiles (aedilicii) were appointed to preside as iudices quaestionis.

² For cases of extortion the number was specially fixed by the Lex Acilia at four hundred and fifty, from whom fifty were chosen as jurors.

SELECT ORATIONS OF CICERO

DEFENCE OF ROSCIUS.

B.C. 80.

SEXTUS ROSCIUS was a rich and respected citizen of Ameria, an Umbrian town (municipium) about fifty miles north of Rome. He had a taste for city life, and spent most of his time at the capital, where he was on intimate terms with some of the highest families, especially the Metelli and Scipios. Meantime his son Sextus, who certainly lacked his father's cultivated tastes, and who was accused by his enemies of rudeness and clownishness, had charge of the extensive family estates at Ameria.

Sometime during the dictatorship of Sulla (probably in the autumn of 81 B.C.) the elder Roscius was murdered one evening as he was returning from a dinner party. The murder was no doubt procured, or at least connived at, by one Titus Roscius Magnus, his fellow-townsmen and enemy. However that may be, the name of the murdered man was put upon the proscription list by a freedman and favorite of Sulla, one Chrysogonus, who bought his confiscated estates at auction at a nominal price. Three of these estates (there were thirteen in all) he transferred to a certain Titus Roscius Capito, another townsman and enemy of the deceased, and a leading man at Ameria; the remainder he put in charge of Magnus as his agent. The younger Sextus, a man of forty, thus robbed of his patrimony, had recourse to his father's friends in Rome for protection and help. The three conspirators, fearing that they might be compelled to disgorge, resolved to secure themselves by accusing him of his father's murder. This they did through a professional prosecutor (accūsātor) named Erucius, who undertook the legal formalities of the prosecution.

The aristocratic friends of Roscius, not daring to brave the creature of the dictator, but unwilling to leave their guest-friend (hospes) undefended, prevailed upon Cicero, then young and ambitious, to undertake the case. To oppose Chrysogonus was an act that called for disinterested courage, and nothing in Cicero's career is more to his credit. By his successful conduct of the case he obtained the well-merited rank of a leader among the rising advocates of Rome. The Defence of Roscius was the first of Cicero's public orations or pleas; and it is criticised by the author himself in his Orator, ch. 30.

Cicero's Apology for Appearing in the Defence.

- CREDŌ ego vōs, iūdicēs, mirārī quid sit quod, cum tot summi ōrātōrēs hominēsque nōbilissimī sedeant, ego potissimum surrēxerim, quī neque aetāte neque ingeniō neque auctōritāte sim cum hīs, quī sedeant, comparandus. Omnēs hī, quōs vidētis adesse, in hāc causā iniūriam novō scelere cōnflātā putant oportēre dēfendī, dēfendere ipsī propter iniquitātem temporum nōn audent; ita fit ut adsint propterea quod officium sequuntur, taceant autem idcirco quia periculum vitant.
2. Quid ergo? Audācissimus ego ex omnibus? Minimē. At tantō officiōsior quam cēterī? Nē istius quidem laudis ita sim cupidus, ut aliis eam praereptam velim. Quae mē igitur rēs praeter cēterōs impulit, ut causam Sex. Rōscī reciperem? Quia, si quis hōrum dixisset, quōs vidētis adesse, in quibus summa auctōritās est atque amplitūdō, si verbum dē rē publicā fēcisset, — id quod in hāc causā fieri necesse est, — multō plūra dixisse quam dīxisset putārētur : 3. ego etiamsi omnia quae dicenda sunt liberē dixerō, nēquāquam tamen similiter ōrātiō mea exīre atque in volgus ēmānāre poterit. Deinde, quod cēterōrum neque dictum obscurum potest esse, propter nōbilitātem et amplitūdinem, neque temerē dictō concēdī, propter aetātem et prūdentiam : 5 ego si quid liberius dixerō, vel occultum esse, propterea quod nōndum ad rem pūblicam accessi, vel ignōscī adulēscēntiae poterit, — tametsi nōn modo ignōscendī ratiō, vērūm etiam cōgnōscendī cōnsuētūdō iam dē civitāte sublāta est.

4. Accēdit illa quoque causa, quod ā cēteris forsitan ita petītum sit ut dicerent, ut utrumvis salvō officiō facere sē posse arbitrārentur : ā mē autem eī contendērunt, quī apud mē et amīcitiā et beneficiis et dignitāte plūrimum possunt, quōrum ego nec benevolentiam ergā mē ignōrāre, nec auc- 15 tōritātem aspernārī, nec voluntātem negligere dēbeam. Hīs dē causis ego huic causae patrōnus exstiti, nōn ēlēctus ūnus quī māximō ingeniō, sed relictus ex omnibus quī minimō periculō possem dicere ; neque uti satis firmō praesidiō dēfēnsus Sex. Rōscius, vērūm uti nē omninō dēsertus 20 esset.

Character of the Elder Roscius, the Murdered Man.

VI. 5. Sex. Rōscius, pater hūiusce, mūniceps Amerinus fuit, cum genere et nōbilitāte et pecūniā nōn modo suī mūnicipī vērūm etiam eius vicīnitātis facile prīmus, tum grātiā atque hospitīis flōrēns hominum nōbilissimōrum. 25 Nam cum Metellis, Serviliis, Scipiōnibus erat eī nōn modo hospitium, vērūm etiam domesticus ūsus et cōnsuētūdō ; quās (ut aequum est) familiās honestātis amplitūdinisque grātiā nōminō. Itaque ex omnibus suis commodis hōc solum filiō reliquit : nam patrimonium domestici praedōnēs 30 vī ēreptum possident, fāma et vīta innocentis ab hospitibus amīcisque paternis dēfenditur. 6. Is cum omni tempore nōbilitātis fautor fuisset, tum hōc tumultū proximō, cum omnium nōbilitas dignitas et salūs in discrimen veniret, praeter cēterōs in eā vicinitate eam partem causamque operā, studiō, auctoritate dēfendit: etenim rēctum putābat prō eōrum honestate sē pūgnāre, propter quōs ipse honestissimus inter suōs numerābatur. Posteaquam victōria cōstituta est, ab armisque recessimus, — cum prōscriberentur hominēs, atque ex omni regiōne caperentur ei qui adversariū fuisse putābantur, — erat ille Rōmae frequēns; in forō et in ōre omnium cotidiē versābatur, magis ut exsultāre victōriā 10 nōbilitatis vidērētur, quam timēre nē quid ex eā calamitatis sibi accideret.

7. Erant ei veterēs inimicitiae cum duobus Rōsciis Amerinīs, quōrum alterum sedere in accūsātorum subselliis vidēō, alterum tria hūiusce praedia possidere audiō. Quās inimicitias si tam cavere potuisset, quam metuere solēbat, viveret.
 15 Neque enim, iudicēs, iniuriā metuēbat. Nam duo isti sunt T. Rōscii, quōrum alteri Capitōni cōgnōmen est, iste qui adest Māgnus vocātur, hominēs hūius modī: alter plurimārum palmārum vetus ac nōbilis gladiātor habētur, hic 20 autem nūper sē ad eum lanistam contulit; quique ante hanc pūgnam tirō esset, [quod sciam,] facile ipsum magistrum scelere audāciāque superāvit.

The Murder.

VII. 8. Nam cum hic Sex. Rōscius esset Ameriae, T. autem iste Rōscius Rōmae, — cum hic filius adsiduus in 25 praediis esset, cumque sē voluntate patris rei familiārī vitaeque rústicae dedisset, iste autem frequēns Rōmae esset, — occiditur ad balneās Palacinās rediēns ā cēnā Sex. Rōscius. Spērō ex hōc ipsō nōn esse obscurum, ad quem suspiciō malefici pertineat: vērum id, quod adhūc est suspiciōsum, Enormity of the Charge.

21. Occidisse patrem Sex. Rōscius arguitur. Scelestum, di immortalēs! ac nefārium facinus, atque eius modi, quō 20 ūnō maleficiō scelera omnia complexa esse videantur. Etenim si, id quod praeclārē ā sapientibus dicitur, voltū saepe laeditur pietās, quod supplicium satis ācre reperiētur in eum quī mortem obtulerit parenti, prō quō mori ipsum, si rēs postulāret, iūra divīna atque hūmāna cōgēbant? In hōc 25 tantō, tam atrōcī, tam singulārī maleficiō, quod ita rārō exstitit ut, si quandō auditum sit, portenti ac prōdigī simile numerētur, quibus tandem tū, C. Erūci, argūmentis accūsātōrem cēnsēs ūti oportēre? Nōnne et audāciam eius quī in crīmen vocētur singulārem ostendere, et mōrēs ferōs, immā- 30 nemque nātūrā, et vitam vitiis flāgitiisque omnibus dēditam, [et] dēnique omnia ad perniciem prōfligāta atque perditā?

quōrum tū nihil in Sex. Rōscium, nē obiciendī quidem causā, contulistī.

Improbability from the Character of the Defendant.

XIV. 22. 'Patrem occidit Sex. Rōscius.' Quī homō?
5 Adulēscēntulus corruptus et ab hominibus nēquam inductus? annōs nātus māior quadrāgintā. Vetus vidēlicet sicārius, homō audāx et saepe in caede versātus? at hōc ab accūsātōre nē dīcī quidem audistis. Lūxuriēs igitur hominem nīmīrum, et aeris aliēnī māgnitūdō, et indomitae animī cupi-10 ditātēs ad hōc scelus impulērunt? Dē lūxuriā pūrgāvit Erūcius, cum dīxit hunc nē in convīviō quidem ūllō ferē interfuisse. Nihil autem umquam cuiquam dēbuit. Cupiditātēs porrō quae possunt esse in eō quī, ut ipse accūsātōr obiēcit, rūri semper habitārit, et in agrō colendō vīxerit? — 15 quae vīta māmīmē disiūcta ā cupiditāte est, et cum officiō coniūcta.

Absence of Motive.

23. Quae rēs igitur tantum istum furōrem Sex. Rōsciō obiēcit? 'Patrī' inquit 'nōn placēbat.' Quam ob causam?
Necesse est enim eam quoque iūstam et māgnam et perspi-20 cuam fuisse: nam, ut illud incrēdibile est, mortem oblātā esse patrī ā filiō sine plūrimis et māmimis causis, sic hōc vēri simile nōn est, odiō fuisse parentī filium, sine causis multis et māgnis et necessariis. Rūrsus igitur eōdem rever-tāmur, et quaerāmus quae tanta vitia fuerint in unicō filiō, 25 quārē is patrī displicēret. At perspicuum est nūllum fuisse.
Pater igitur āmēns, quī ōdisset eum sine causā quem prōcreārat. At is quidem fuit omnium cōstantissimus. Ergō illud iam perspicuum profectō est, sī neque āmēns pater neque perditus filius fuerit, neque odi causam patrī neque 30 sceleris filiō fuisse.

Necessity of Showing a Motive.

XXII. 24. Dē parricidiō causa dicitur : ratiō ab accūsātōre reddita nōn est, quam ob causam patrem filius occiderit. Quod in minimis noxiis, et in his leviōribus peccātis quae magis crēbra et iam prope cotidiāna sunt, māximē et primum quaeritur, — quae causa maleficī fuerit, — id Erūcius in parricidiō quaerī nōn putat oportēre. In quō scelere, iūdicēs, etiam cum multae causae convēnisse ūnum in locum atque inter sē congruere videntur, tamen nōn temerē crēditur, neque levī coniectūrā rēs penditur, neque testis incertus auditur, neque accūsātōris ingeniō rēs iūdicātur : cum multa anteā commissa maleficia, tum vīta hominis perditissima, tum singulāris audācia ostendātur necesse est, neque audācia solum, sed summus furor atque āmentia.

Necessity of Direct Evidence.

25. Haec cum sint omnia, tamen exstent oportet expressa sceleris vestigia, — ubi, quā ratiōne, per quōs, quō tempore maleficiū sit admissum ; quae nisi multa et manifestā sunt, profectō rēs tam scelestā, tam atrōx, tam nefāria crēdi nōn potest. Māgna est enim vis hūmānitātis ; multum valet communiō sanguinis ; reclāmitat istius modī suspiciōnibus ipsa nātūra ; portentum atque mōnstrum certissimum est, esse aliquem hūmānā speciē et figurā, quī tantum immānitātē bēstiās vicerit, ut propter quōs hanc suāvissimā lucem aspēxerit, eōs indignissimē luce ^{deprived} privārit, cum etiam ferās inter sēsē partus atque educātiō et nātūra ipsa conciliet.

Examples from Other Cases.

XXIII. 26. Nōn ita multis ante annis, aiunt T. Caelium quendam Tarracinēsem, hominem nōn obscurum, cum cēnātus cubitum in idem conclāve cum duōbus adolescentibus filiis isset, inventum esse māne iugulātum. Cum neque servus quisquam reperirētur, neque liber, ad quem ea suspiciō pertinēret, id aetātis autem duo filiī propter cubantēs nē sēnsisse quidem sē dicerent, nōmina filiōrum dē parricidiō dēlāta sunt. Quid poterat tam esse suspiciōsum?

 Neutrumne sēnsisse? Ausum autem esse quemquam sē 5 in id conclāve committere, eō potissimum tempore, cum ibidem essent duo adulēscētēs filii, quī et sentīre et dēfendere facile possent? 27. Erat porrō nēmō in quem ea suspiciō convenīret. Tamen cum plānum iūdicibus esset factum, apertō ōstiō dormientis eōs reptōs esse, iūdicīō 10 absolūtī adulēscētēs et suspiciōnē omnī liberātī sunt.
 Nēmō enim putābat quemquam esse, quī, cum omnia divīna atque hūmāna iūra scelere nefāriō polluisset, somnum statim capere potuisset; proptereā quod, quī tantum facinus com-misērunt, nōn modo sine cūrā quīescere, sed nē spirāre 15 quidem sine metū possunt.

Need of Strongest Proof Shown by the Severity of the Penalty.

28. Quārē hōc quō minus est crēdibile nisi ostenditur, eō magis est, sī convincitur, vindicandum. Itaque cum multis ex rēbus intellegī potest māiōrēs nostrōs nōn modo armis plūs quam cēterās nātiōnēs, vērū etiam cōsiliō 20 sapientiāque potuisse, tum ex hāc rē vel māximē, quod in impiōs singulāre supplicium invēnērunt: insuī voluērunt in cūleum vivōs, atque in flūmen dēicī. Ō singulārem sapientiam, iūdicēs! Nōne videntur hunc hominem ex rērum nātūrā sustulisse et ēripuisse, cui repente caelum, sōlem, 25 aquam terramque adēmerint: ut, quī eum necāsset, unde ipse nātus esset, carēret eis rēbus omnibus, ex quibus omnia nāta esse dicuntur? 29. Nōluērunt feris corpus obicere, nē bēstiīs quoque, quae tantum scelus attigissent, immāniōribus ūterēmur: nōn sic nūdōs in flūmen dēicere, nē, cum dēlātī 30 essent in mare, ipsum polluerent, quō cētera, quae violāta sunt, expiārī putantur. Dēnique nihil tam vile neque tam volgāre est cūius partem ūllam reliquerint. Etenim quid est tam commūne quam spīritus vīvīs, terra mortuīs, mare fluctuantibus, litus ēiectīs? Ita vīvunt, dum possunt, ut dūcere animam dē caelō nōn queant. Ita moriuntur, ut eōrum ossa terra nōn tangat. Ita iactantur fluctibus, ut numquam adluantur. Ita postrēmō ēiciuntur, ut nē ad saxa quidem mortuī 5 conquiēscant. 30. Tantī malefici crimen, cui maleficiō tam insigne supplicium est cōstitutū, probāre tē, Erūcī, cēnsēs posse tālibus viris, si nē causam quidem malefici prōtuleris? Sī hunc apud bonōrum ēmptōrēs ipsōs accūsārēs, eīque iūdicīō Chrēsogonus praeesset, tamen diligentius parātiusque 10 vēnissēs. Utrum quid agātur nōn vidēs, an apud quōs agātur? Agitur dē parricidiō, quod sine multis causis suscipi nōn potest; apud hominēs autem prūdentissimōs agitur, quī intellegunt nēminem nē minimum quidem maleficiū sine causā admittere. 15

No Opportunity to Commit the Crime.

XXVII. 31. Estō: causam prōferre nōn potes. Tametsī statim vicisse dēbeō, tamen dē meō iūre dēcēdam, et tibi quod in aliā causā nōn concēderem in hāc concēdam, frētus hūius innocentīā. Nōn quaerō abs tē quā rē patrem Sex. Rōscius occīderit: quaerō quō modō occīderit. Ita quaerō 20 abs tē, C. Erūcī, quō modō; et sic tēcum agam, ut meō locō vel respondendī vel interpellandī tibi potestātem faciam, vel etiam, si quid volēs, interrogandī.

32. Quō modō occidit? Ipse percussit, an aliīs occīdendum dedit? Sī ipsum arguis, Rōmae nōn fuit: sī per aliōs 25 fēcisse dicis, quaerō servōsne an liberōs? si per liberōs, quōs hominēs? indidemne Ameriā, an hōsce ex urbe sicāriōs? sī Ameriā, quī sunt hī? cūr nōn nōminātur? sī Rōmā, unde eōs nōverat Rōscius, quī Rōmam multis annis nōn vēnit, neque umquam plūs trīduō fuit? ubi eōs convēnit? quicum 30 locūtus est? quō modō persuāsit? 'Pretium dedit.' Cui dedit? per quem dedit? unde aut quantum dedit? Nōnne his vestigiis ad caput malefici perveniri solet? Et simul tibi in mentem veniat facitō, quem ad modum vitam huiusce depinxis: hunc hominem ferum atque agrestem fuisse; numquam cum homine quōquam conlocūtum esse; numquam in oppidō cōstitisse.

33. Quā in rē praetereō illud, quod mihi māximō argūmentō ad huius innocentiam poterat esse, in rūsticis mōribus, in victū aridō, in hāc horridā incultāque vitā, istius modi maleficia gignī nōn solēre. Ut nōn omnem frūgem neque
10 arborem in omnī agrō reperire possis, sic nōn omne facinus in omnī vitā nāscitur. In urbe lūxuriēs creātur; ex lūxuriā existat avāritia necesse est, ex avāritiā ērumpat audācia; inde omnia scelera ac maleficia gignuntur. Vita autem haec rūstica, quam tū agrestem vocās, parsimōniae, diligen-15 tiaē, iūstitiae magistra est.

34. Vērūm haec missa faciō. Illud quaerō, — is homō, quī, ut tūte dicis, numquam inter hominēs fuerit, per quōs hominēs hōc tantum facinus tam occultē, absēns praesertim, cōficere potuerit. Multa sunt falsa, iūdicēs, quae tamen
20 arguī suspiciōsē possunt; in his rēbus sī suspiciō reperta erit, culpam inesse concēdam. Rōmae Sex. Rōscius occiditur, cum in agrō Amerinō esset filius. Litterās, crēdō, misit alicui sicāriō, quī Rōmae nōverat nēmīnem. ‘Arcesivī alīquem.’ Quem aut’ quāndō? ‘Nūntium misit.’
25 Quem aut ad quem? ‘Pretiō, grātiā, spē, prōmissis indūxit alīquem.’ Nihil hōrum nē cōfingī quidem potest, et tamen causa dē parricidiō dicitur!

If Committed by Slaves, — by whose Slaves?

35. Reliquum est ut per servōs id admiserit. Ō dī immortālēs! rem miseram et calamitōsam, quod in tāli 30 crimine quod innocentī salūti solet esse, ut servōs in quaestiōnem polliceātur, id Sex. Rōsciō facere nōn licet. Vōs, quī hunc accūsātis, omnīs eius servōs habētis. Ūnus puer, victūs cotidiānī minister, ex tantā familiā Sex. Rōsciō relictus nōn est. Tē nunc appellō P. Scīpiō, tē, Metelle. Vōbīs advocātis, vōbīs agentibus, aliquotiēns duōs servōs 5 paternōs in quaestiōnem ab adversāriis Sex. Rōscius postulāvit. Meministisne T. Rōscium recūsāre? Quid? ei servī ubi sunt? Chrēsogonum, iūdicēs, sectantur: apud eum sunt in honōre et pretiō. Etiam nunc ut ex eis quaerātur ego postulō, hīc ōrat atque obsecrat. Quid facitis? cūr 10 recūsātis? Dubitāte etiam nunc, iūdicēs, sī potestis, ā quō sit Sex. Rōscius occīsus, — ab eōne, quī propter illius mortem in egestāte et in insidiīs versātur, cui ne quaerendī quidem dē morte patris potestās permittitur, an ab eis quī quaestiōnem fugitant, bona possident, in caede atque ex caede 15 vivunt.

Sulla's Favorite, Chrysogonus, Implicated.

XLIII. 36. Veniō nunc ad illud nōmen aureum [Chrēsogonī], sub quō nōmine tōta societās latuit: dē quō, iūdicēs, neque quō modō dicam neque quō modō taceam reperire possum. Sī enim taceō, vel māximam partem relinquo; 20 sīn autem dicō, vereor nē nōn ille sōlus, id quod ad mē nihil attinet, sed aliī quoque plūrēs laesōs sē esse putent. Tametsī ita sē rēs habet, ut mihi in commūnem causam sectōrum dicendum nihil māgnō opere videātur; haec enim causa nova profectō et singulāris est. 25

He is the Purchaser of the Property.

37. Bonōrum Sex. Rōsci ēmptor est Chrēsogonus. Prīmum hōc videāmus: eius hominis bona quā ratiōne vēniērunt, aut quō modō vēnīre potuērunt? Atque hōc nōn ita quaeram, iūdicēs, ut id dicam esse indīgnum, hominis innocentis bona vēnisse; sī enim haec audientur āc 30 liberē dicentur, nōn fuit tantus homō Sex. Rōscius in civitāte, ut dē eō potissimum conquerāmur. Vērum [ego] hōc quaerō: quī potuērunt istā ipsā lēge, quae dē prōscriptiōne est, — sive Valeria est, sive Cornēlia, nōn enim nōvī nec sciō, — vērum istā ipsā lēge bona Sex. Rōscī vēnīre quī

 5 potuērunt? Scriptum enim ita dicunt esse, ut eōrum bona vēneant, quī prōscriptī sunt — quō in numerō Sex. Rōscius nōn est — aut eōrum quī in adversāriōrum praesidiīs occisī sunt. Dum praesidia ūlla fuērunt, in Sūllae praesidiīs fuit; postea quam ab armīs recessum est, in summō ōtiō rediēns
 10 ā cēnā Rōmae occisus est. Si lēge, bonā quoque lēge vēnisse fateor; sin autem cōstat, contrā omnis nōn modo veterēs lēgēs vērum etiam novās occisum esse, bona quō iūre aut quō mōre aut quā lēge vēnierint quaerō.

XLIV. 38. In quem hōc dicam quaeris, Erūcī? Nōn in 15 eum quem vīs et putās; nam Sūllam et ōrātiō mea ab initiō et ipsius eximia virtūs omni tempore pūrgāvit. Ego haec omnia Chrēsogonum fēcisse dicō, ut ēmentirētur, ut malum cīvem Rōscium fuisse fingeret, ut eum apud adversāriōs occisum esse diceret, ut his dē rēbus ā lēgātis Amerinōrum 20 docērī L. Sūllam passus nōn sit. Dēnique etiam illud suspicor, omninō haec bona nōn vēnisse: id quod postea, si per vōs, iūdicēs, licitum erit, aperiētur.

The Sale by Proscription Illegal.

39. Opīnor enim esse in lēge, quam ad diem prōscriptiōnēs vēnditiōnēsque fiant: [nīmīrum] Kalendās Iūniās.
 25 Aliquot post mēnsis et homō occisus est, et bona vēnisse dicuntur. Profectō aut haec bona in tabulās publicās nūlla rediērunt, nōsque ab istō nebulōne facētius elūdīmur quam putāmus; aut, si rediērunt, tabulae publicae corruptae aliquā ratiōne sunt: nam lēge quidem bona vēnīre nōn potuisse 30 cōstat. Intellegō mē ante tempus, iūdicēs, haec scrūtārī, et prope modum errāre, quī, cum capitī Sex. Rōscī medērī dēbeam, reduviam cūrem. Nōn enim labōrat dē pecūniā; nōn ūllius ratiōnem suī commodi dūcit; facile egestātem suam sē lātūrum putat, sī hāc indignā suspiciōne et fictō crimine liberātus sit.

40. Vērum quaesō ā vōbīs, iūdicēs, ut haec pauca quae restant ita audiātis, ut partim mē dicere prō mē ipsō putētis, 5 partim prō Sex. Rōsciō. Quae enim mihi indīgna et intolērābilia videntur, quaeque ad omnīs, nisi prōvidēmus, arbitror pertinēre, ea prō mē ipsō ex animī meī sēnsū āc dolōre prōnūntiō; quae ad hūius vītae [cāsum] causam[que] perti-neant, et quid hīc prō sē dici velit, et quā condiciōne 10 contentus sit, iam in extrēmā ōrātiōne nostrā, iūdicēs, audiētis. XLV. 41. Ego haec ā Chrēsogonō, meā sponte, remōtō Sex. Rōsciō, quaerō: primum, quā rē civis optimī bona vēnierint; deinde, quā rē hominis ēius, quī neque prō- scriptus neque apud adversāriōs occisus est, bona vēnierint, 15 cum in eōs sōlōs lēx scripta sit; deinde, quā rē aliquantō post eam diem vēnierint, quae diēs in lēge praefīnita est; deinde, cūr tantulō vēnierint. Quae omnia sī, quem ad modum solent libertī nequam et improbī facere, in patrōnum suum voluerit cōferre, nihil ēgerit: nēmō est enim qui 20 nesciat propter māgnitudinem rērum multa multōs fūrtim imprūdente L. Sūllā commīsisse.

43. Vereor, iudicēs, nē quis imperitior existimet mē causam nōbilitātis victōriamque voluisse laedere : tametsi meō iūre possum, si quid in hāc parte mihi nōn placeat, vituperāre ; nōn enim vereor nē quis aliēnum mē animum habuisse ā causā nōbilitātis existimet. XLVII. Sciunt ei quī mē nōrunt, mē prō meā tenui infirmāque parte, — postea quam id quod māximē volui fieri nōn potuit, ut compōneretur, — id māximē dēfendisse, ut ei vincerent quī vicērunt. Quis enim erat, quī nōn vidēret humilitatem cum [dignitāte dē] amplitūdine contendere ? Quō in certāmine perditī civis erat nōn sē ad eōs iungere, quibus incolumibus, et domi dignitās et foris auctōritās retinērētur. Quae perfecta esse et suum cuique hōnōrem et gradum redditum gaudeō, iudicēs, vehementerque laetor ; eaque omnia deōrum voluntāte, studiō populī Rōmāni, cōnsiliō et imperiō et fēlicitāte Sūllae, gesta esse intellegō. 15

44. Quod animadversum est in eōs quī contrā omni ratiōne pūgnārunt, nōn dēbeō reprehendere ; quod viris fortibus, quōrum opera eximia in rēbus gerendis exstitit, hōnōs habitus est, laudō. Quae ut fierent, idcirco pūgnātum esse arbitror, mēque in eō studiō partium fuisse cōnfiteor. Sīn autem id āctum est, et idcirco arma sūmpta sunt, ut hominēs postrēmī pecūniis aliēnis locuplētārentur, et in fortūnās ūniuscūiusque impetum facerent, et id nōn modo rē prohibēre nōn licet, sed nē verbis quidem vituperāre, tum vērō in istō bellō nōn recreātus neque restitūtus, sed subāctus oppressusque populus Rōmānus est. Vērū longē aliter est ; nihil hōrum est, iudicēs : nōn modo nōn laedētur causa nōbilitātis, si istis hominibus resistētis, vērū etiam ornābitur. 25

Appeal to the Court against Chrysogonus.

LII. 53. Verum si a Chrysogono, iudices, non impetramus, ut pecunia nostra contentus sit, vitam ne petat, — si ille adduci non potest, ut, cum ademerit nobis omnia quae nostra erant propria, ne lucem quoque hanc, quae communis est, eripere cupiat, — si non satis habet avaritiam suam pecunia explere, nisi etiam crudelitati sanguis praebitus sit, — unum perflugium, iudices, una spes reliqua est Sex. Roscio, eadem quae rei publicae, vestra pristina bonitas et misericordia. Quae si manet, salvi etiam nunc esse possumus; sin ea crudelitas, quae hoc tempore in re publica versata est, vestros quoque animos — id quod fieri profecto non potest — duriores acerbioresque reddidit, actum est, iudices: inter feras satius est aetatem degere, quam in hac tanta immanitate versari. 54. Ad eamne rem vos reservati estis, ad eamne rem delicti, ut eos condemnaretis, quos sectores ac sicarii iugulare non potuissent? Solent hoc boni imperatores facere, cum proelium committunt, ut in eo loco quo fugam hostium fore arbitrentur milites conlocent, in quos, si qui ex acie fugerint, de improviso incidant. Nimirum similiter arbitrantur isti bonorum emptores, — vos hic, talis viros, sedere, qui excipiat eos qui de suis manibus effūgerint. Dī prohibeant, iūdicēs, ut hōc, quod māiōrēs cōnsilium pūblicum vocārī voluērunt, praesidium sectōrum existimētur.

IMPEACHMENT OF VERRES.

B.C. 70.

CAIUS VERRES, a man of noble birth, but notorious for his crimes and exactions in the civil war and in the offices he had held since, was city prætor (prætor urbanus) B.C. 74. At the close of his term of office, he went, in accordance with the law, as proprætor, to govern the province of Sicily. By reason of the disturbed condition of Italy, from the revolt of Spartacus, he was not relieved at the end of a year, as the law required, but continued two years longer in the government of the province, when he was succeeded by Lucius Cæcilius Metellus. During these three years he was guilty of the most abominable oppressions and exactions; and the Sicilians, as soon as they were relieved of his presence, brought suit against him in the court of Repetundæ (that for the trial of cases of Extortion), then presided over by the prætor Manius Acilius Glabrio. To conduct the prosecution they had recourse to Cicero, who already stood high among Roman advocates, and who was personally known and trusted by the Sicilians on account of his honorable administration of the quæstorship in their island in B.C. 77. Cicero willingly took charge of the case, the more so as the counsel for Verres was Hortensius, the leading lawyer of the time, against whom he was eager to measure his strength.

Although the cruelty and rapacity of Verres were notorious, yet his relations to the Roman nobility insured him the same kind of support at home which recently, under somewhat similar circumstances, was afforded to Governor Eyre in England, on his return from Jamaica: not only Hortensius, but Curio, a man of excellent reputation, with members of the eminent families of Scipio and Metellus, stood firmly by him. The only hope of Verres lay in preventing a fair and speedy trial. First he tried to obtain a prosecutor who should be in collusion with him, and would not push him too hard. For this purpose one Cæcilius was put forward, an insignificant person, but a native of Sicily. Cicero's first speech in the case (In Q. Cæcilium) was therefore a preliminary argument before the prætor Glabrio in person, to show that he, rather than Cæcilius, should be allowed to conduct the case. This it was not hard to do, and he set out at once for Sicily to collect evidence, for which purpose he was allowed one hundred and ten days.

To consume time the opposition had planned to bring before the same court a trumped-up action against another provincial governor which should have precedence of the trial of Verres. To this end they had procured for the prosecutor in the rival suit an allowance of one hundred and eight days for collecting evidence in Achaia—or two days less than the time which Cicero was expected to need. This intrigue was foiled by Cicero's industry and skill. He used not quite half of the time allowed him, arriving in Rome, with ample evidence, not only before the prosecutor in the rival case was ready, but even before the latter had left Italy on his pretended tour of investigation. The trial of Verres was now fixed for Aug. 5, B.C. 70 (consulship of Pompey and Crassus).

Meantime (in the latter part of July) the elections were held for the next year. As was the custom in Rome, these occurred several months before the newly elected magistrates were to enter upon their offices. The successful candidates, under the title of designati, enjoyed a dignity almost equal to that of the actual magistrates, although with no real power (see ch. ix.). In these elections Cicero was designated ædile; but his rival Hortensius was chosen consul, with Quintus Metellus Creticus, Verres' fast friend, as his colleague. More than this, Marcus Metellus, brother of Quintus, was chosen prætor, and the lot fell to him to preside the next year in the court of Repetundæ. If now the trial could be put over till the next year, when Hortensius and the two Metelli would be in the three most influential positions in the State, Verres felt quite sure of getting clear. Neither did it seem as if this would be very hard to bring about; for the last six months of the Roman year were so full of festivals and other days on which the court could not sit, that the case would be liable to constant interruptions and delays. The postponement would have disappointed Cicero sorely, for, by good luck in drawing the names, and sagacity in challenging, he had a jury that he could trust, and he was not willing to run the risk of a change.

Under these circumstances Cicero made the second speech of the Verrine group — that which is known as the Actio Prima (included in the present edition, pp. 28–47 below). In this oration he declared his intention of departing from the usual course of procedure in order to push the trial through before the New Year. It was customary for the prosecutor, after opening the case (as in the present speech), to present his proofs and arguments in a long connected oration (or a series of orations); there followed a reply from the defendant's counsel, and then the witnesses were introduced. Cicero, omitting the long statement just described, proceeded to bring forward his witnesses immediately. Since the only hope of the defence lay in putting off the trial, Cicero's promptitude was decisive: Hortensius soon threw up his case, and Verres went into exile, with a name forever associated with extortion and misgovernment. Full restitution of the plunder was, however, not obtained: a compromise was made, by which a less sum was paid in satisfaction of the claims. The five speeches known as the "Accusation" proper (Actio Secunda) were never delivered, but were written out and published in order to put on record the facts which Cicero had gathered with so much pains, and to give a specimen of his powers in the way of forensic composition.

- VII. 18. Nam, ut Hortēsius, cōsul dēsīgnātus, domum redūcēbātur ē Campō, cum māximā frequentiā ac multitudīne fit obviam cāsū eī multitudinī C. Cūriō ; quem ego hominem 30 honōris [potius quam contumēliae] causā nōminātum volō.

Etenim ea dicam, quae ille, si commemorari noluisset, non tantō in conventū, tam apertē palamque dixisset : quae tamen a mē pedetentim cautēque dicentur ; ut et amicitiae nostrae et dignitātis illius habita ratiō esse intellegatur.

19. Videt ad ipsum fornicem Fabiānum in turbā Verrem : 5 appellat hominem, et ei vōce māximā grātulatur : ipsi Hortēnsiō, quī cōsul erat factus, propinquīs necessariisque eius, quī tum aderant, verbum nūllum facit : cum hōc cōsistit ;
hunc amplexatur ; hunc iubet sine cūrā esse. 'Renūntiō,' inquit, 'tibi, tē hodiernis comitiis esse absolutum.' Quod 10 cum tam multī hominēs honestissimī audissent, statim ad mē dēfertur : immō vērō, ut quisque mē viderat, nārrābat.
Aliis illud indignum, aliis ridiculum, vidēbatur : ridiculum eis quī istius causam in testium fidē, in criminum ratiōne, in iudicum potestāte, non in comitiis cōsulāribus, positam 15 arbitrābantur : indignum eis, quī altius aspiciēbant, et hanc grātulātiōnem ad iudicium corrumperendum spectāre vidē-bant. 20. Etenim sic ratiōcinābantur, sic honestissimī hominēs inter sē et mēcum loquēbantur : apertē iam et perspicuē nulla esse iudicia. Quī reus pridie iam ipse sē condemnā- 20 tum putābat, is, postea quam dēfēnsor eius cōsul est factus, absolvitur ! Quid igitur ? quod tōta Sicilia, quod omnēs Siculi, omnēs negōtiātōrēs, omnēs pūblicae privātaeque litterae Rōmae sunt, nihilne id valēbit ? nihil, invitō cōsule dēsīgnātō ! Quid ? iudicēs non crimina, non testis, non 25 existimātiōnem populī Rōmāni sequentur ? Non : omnia in ūnīus potestāte ac moderātiōne vertentur.

His Friend Metellus is to be Judge Next Year.

VIII. Vērē loquar, iudicēs : vehementer mē haec rēs commovēbat. Optimus enim quisque ita loquēbatur : iste quidem tibi ēripiētur : sed nōs non tenēbimus iudicia diūtius. 30 Etenim quis poterit, Verre absolutō, dē trānsferendis iudiciis recūsāre ? 21. Erat omnibus molestum : neque eōs tam istius hominis perditī subita laetitia, quam hominis amplissimī nova grātulātiō, commovēbat. Cupiēbam dissimulāre mē id molestē ferre : cupiēbam animī dolōrem vultū tegere, et taciturnitāte cēlare. Ecce autem, illīs ipsis diēbus, cum 5 praetōrēs dēsīgnāti sortirentur, et M. Metellō obtigisset, ut is dē pecūniis repetundīs quaereret, nūntiātur mihi tantam isti grātulātiōnem esse factam, ut is domum quoque puerōs mit-teret, quī uxōrī suae nūntiārent.

22. Sānē nē haec quidem mihi rēs placēbat: neque tamen, 10 tantō opere quid in hāc sorte metuendum mihi esset, intellegēbam. Ūnum illud ex hominibus certīs, ex quibus omnia comperi, reperiēbam : fiscōs complūris cum pecūniā Sicalilātōs : ex his quasi decem fiscōs ad senātōrem illum relictōs 15 esse, comitiōrum meōrum nōmine : divīsōrēs omnium tribuum noctū ad istum vocātōs. 23. Ex quibus quīdam, quī sē omnia meā causā dēbere arbitrābātur, eādē illā nocte ad mē vēnit :

dēmōnstrat, quā iste ōrātiōne ūsus esset : commemorāsse istum, quam liberāliter eōs tractāset [etiam] antea, cum 20 ipse praetūram petisset, et proximīs cōsulārībus praetōri-isque comitiis : deinde continuō esse pollicitum, quantam vellent pecūniam, si mē aedilitāte dēiēcissent. Hīc aliōs negāsse audēre ; aliōs respondisse, nōn putāre id perficī posse : inventum tamen esse fortem amicum, ex eādē fami-milibus dēpositis, id sē perfectūrum pollicērētur : et fuisse tum nōn nullōs, quī sē ūnā factūrōs esse dicerent. Quae cum ita essent, sānē benevolō animō mē, ut māgnō opere

IX. 24. Sollicitābar rēbus māximīs ūnō atque eō per-exiguō tempore. Urgēbant comitia; et in hīs ipsīs oppūgnābar grandī pecūniā. Instābat iūdicium: eī quoque negōtiō divīsōribus ratiō nōn erat, propterea quod eōs intellegere vidēbam mē hōc iūdicio dīstrictum atque obligātum futūrum.

25. Atque hōc ipsō tempore Siculīs dēnūntiātum esse audiō, prīmum ab Hortēnsiō, domum ad illum ut venīrent: Siculōs 10 in eō sānē liberōs fuisse; quī quam ob rem arcesserentur cum intellegerent, nōn vēnisse. Interea comitia nostra, quō-rum iste sē, ut cēterōrum hōc annō comitiōrum, dominum

26. Postea quam illā petitiōnis māgnā cūrā liberātus sum,

27. An mē tacitūrum tantis dē rēbus existimāvistis? et mē, in tantō rei pūblicae existimātiōnisque meae periculō, cuiquam cōsultūrum potius quam officiō et dignitāti meae? Arcessit alter cōsul dēsīgnātus Siculōs: veniunt nōn nūllī, 5 propterea. quod L. Metellus esset praetor in Siciliā. Cum iis ita loquitur: sē cōsulem esse; frātre suum alterum Siciliam prōvinciam obtinēre, alterum esse quaesitūrum dē pecūniis repetundis; Verrī nē nocērī possit multis ratiōnibus esse prōvīsum.
- 10 X. 28. Quid est, quaesō, Metelle, iūdicium corrumpere, sī hōc nōn est? testīs, praesertim [Siculōs], timidōs hominēs et adflictōs, nōn solum auctōritāte dēterrēre, sed etiam cōsulārī metū, et duōrum praetōrum potestāte? Quid facerēs prō innocente homine et propinquō, cum propter hominem 15 perditissimum atque aliēnissimum dē officiō ac dignitāte dēcēdis, et committis, ut, quod ille dictitat, alicui, quī tē ignōret, vērū esse videātur?

XI. Nunc ego, iūdicēs, iam vōs cōsulō, quid mihi faciendum putētis. Id enim cōsili mihi profectō taciti dabit, quod egomet mihi necessāriō capiendum intellegō. 30 Sī ūtar ad dicendum meō lēgitimō tempore, mei labōris,

 10 ēlābatur summum periculum est. Quid est igitur quod fieri possit? Nōn obscurum, opinor, neque absconditum.
33. Fructum istum laudis, quī ex perpetuā oratiōne percipi potuit, in alia tempora reservemus: nunc hominem tabulis, Corrupt Influence of Hortensius Dangerous.

XII. Vērū illud quod institueram dicere, mihi rem tecum esse, huius modī est. Ego cum hanc causam Siculōrum rogātū recēpissem, idque mihi amplum et praeclārum existimāssem, eōs velle meae fidei diligentiaque periculum 25 facere, quī innocentiae abstinentiaque fēcissent; tum susceptō negotiō, māius quiddam mihi prōposui, in quō meam in rem publicam voluntātem populus Rōmānus perspicere posset. 35. Nam illud mihi nēquāquam dīgnum industriā cōnātūque meō vidēbatur, istum ā mē in iudicium, iam 30 omnium iudiciō condemnātum, vocārī, nisi ista tua intolerābilis potentia, et ea cupiditās quā per hōsce annōs in qui-busdam iudiciis ūsus es, etiam in istius hominis dēspērāti causā interpōneretur. Nunc vērō, quoniam haec tē omnis dominātiō rēgnumque iūdiciorum tantō opere dēlectat, et sunt hominēs quōs libīdinis infāmiaequae suae neque pudeat neque taedeat, — quī, quasi dē industriā, in odium offēnsiōnemque populi Rōmāni intruere videantur, — hōc mē profiteor suscepisse, māgnū fortasse onus et mihi periculōsissimū, 5 vērū tamen dignū in quō omnis neryōs aetātis industriaequae meae contenderem.

36. Quoniam tōtus ōrdō paucōrum improbitāte et audāciā premitur et urgētur infāmiā iūdiciorum, profiteor huic generi hominum mē inimicum accūsātōrem, odiōsum, adsi- 10 duum, acerbū adversārium. Hōc mihi sūmō, hōc mihi dēposcō, quod agam in magistrātū, quod agam ex eō locō ex quō mē populus Rōmānus ex Kal. Iānuāriis sēcūm agere dē rē pūblicā ac dē hominibus improbis voluit: hōc mūnus aeditātis meae populō Rōmānō amplissimū pulcherrimū- 15 que polliceor. XIII. 37. Erit tum cōsul Hortēnsius cum summō imperiō et potestāte; ego autem aedilis, hōc est, paulō amplius quam privātus. Tamen hūius modi haec rēs est, quam mē āctūrum esse polliceor, ita populō Rōmānō grāta atque 25 iūcunda, ut ipse cōsul in hāc causā prae mē minus etiam (sī fieri possit) quam privātus esse videātur. Omnia nōn modo commemorābuntur, sed etiam, expositis certis rēbus, agentur, quae inter decem annōs, postea quam iūdicia ad senātum trānslāta sunt, in rēbus iūdicandis nefāriē flāgiti- 30 ōsēque facta sunt. 38. Cōgnōscet ex mē populus Rōmānus quid sit, quam ob rem, cum equester ōrdō iūdicāret, annōs prope quinquāgintā continuōs, in nullō iūdice [equite Rōmānō iūdicante] nē tenuissima quidem suspiciō acceptae pecūniae ob rem iūdicandam cōstitutā sit: quid sit quod, iūdicīis ad senātōrium ōrdinem trāslātis, sublātāque populi Rōmānī in 5 ūnum quemque vestrū potestāte, Q. Calidius damnātus dixerit, minōris HS trīciēns praetōrium hominem honestē nōn posse damnārī: quid sit quod, P. Septimiō senātōre damnātō, Q. Hortēsiō praetōre, dē pecūniis repetundis lis aestimāta sit eō nōmine, quod ille ob rem iūdicandam pecū-

 10 niam accēpisset; 39. quod in C. Herenniō, quod in C. Popilio, senātōribus, quī ambō peculātus damnātī sunt; quod in M. Atiliō, quī dē māiestāte damnātus est, hōc plānum factum sit, eōs pecūniam ob rem iūdicandam accēpisse; quod inventī sint senātōrēs, quī, C. Verre praetōre

 40. Iam vērō quōmodō illam lābem, ignōminiam, calamitā-

XIV. Quō mē tandem animō fore putātis, sī quid in hōc 25 ipsō iūdicīō intellēxerō simili aliquā ratiōne esse violātum atque commissum? cum plānum facere multis testibus pos-sim, C. Verrem in Siciliā, multis audientibus, saepe dīxisse, 'sē habēre hominem potentem, cūius fidūciā prōvinciam spoliāret: neque sibi sōli pecūniam quaerere, sed ita trientium illum ūberrimum quaestuōsissimumque annum tōtum iūdicibus reservāret.'

41. Ex quō mihi venit in mentem illud dīcere (quod apud M'. Glabriōnem nūper cum in rēciundis iūdicibus commemorāssem, intellēxi vehementer populum Rōmānum 5 commovēri), mē arbitrārī, fore utī nātiōnēs exterae lēgātōs ad populum Rōmānum mitterent, ut lēx dē pecūniis repetundis iūdiciumque tollerētur. Sī enim iūdicia nūlla sint, tantum ūnum quemque ablātūrum putant, quantum sibi ac liberis suis satis esse arbitrētur: nunc, quod ēius modi 10 iūdicia sint, tantum ūnum quemque auferre, quantum sibi, patrōnis, advocātis, praetōrī, iūdicibus, satis futūrum sit: hōc profectō infinitum esse: sē avārissimī hominis cupiditātī satisfacere posse, nocentissimī victōriae nōn posse.

An iste umquam dē sē bonam spem habuisset, nisi dē vōbīs malam opiniōnem animō imbibisset? Quō māiōre etiam (sī fierī potest) apud 20 vōs odiō esse dēbet, quam est apud populum Rōmānum, cum in avāritiā, scelere, periūriō, vōs suī similis esse arbitrētur.

THE PLUNDER OF SYRACUSE.

(In C. Verrem: Actio II., Lib. IV., ch. 52-60.)

THE passage which follows is from the fourth oration of the Accusatio, the most famous of all, known as the De Signis because it treats chiefly of the works of art stolen by Verres. Cicero has been describing the plundering of many temples and public buildings, and in this passage he recounts in detail the case of one chief city, Syracuse, as a climax. Syracuse was by far the largest and richest of all the Greek cities of Italy and Sicily. It was a colony of Corinth, founded B.C. 734, and in course of time obtained the rule over the whole eastern part of Sicily. It remained independent, with a considerable territory, after the western part of the island (far the larger part) passed under the power of Rome in the First Punic War; but in the Second Punic War (B.C. 212) it was captured by Marcellus, and ever after was subject to Rome. It was at this time the capital of the province.

UNIUS etiam urbis omnium pulcherrimae atque ōrnātissimae, Syrācūsārum, direptiōnem commemorābō et in medium prōferam, iūdicēs, ut aliquandō tōtam hūius generis ōrātiōnem conclūdā atque dēfiniam. Nēmō ferē vestrūm
5 est quīn quem ad modum captae sint ā M. Mārcellō Syrācūsae saepe audierit, nōn numquam etiam in annālibus lēgerit. Cōnferte hanc pācem cum illō bellō, hūius praetōris adventum cum illius imperātōris victōriā, hūius cohortem impūrā cum illius exercitū invictō, hūius libidīnēs cum illius conti-

3. Urbem Syracūsās māximam esse Graecārum, pulcher-rimam omnium saepe audistis. Est, iūdicēs, ita ut dicitur.
Nam et sitū est cum mūnitō tum ex omnī aditū, vel terrā vel marī, praeclārō ad aspectum, et portūs habet prope in aedificātiōne aspectūque urbis inclūsōs: quī cum diversōs 15

Eōrum coniūctiōne pars oppidī, quae appellātur Īnsula, marī diiūcta angustō, ponte rūsus adiungitur et contiquae duobus portibus cincta, in utriusque portus ostium regis fuit, quam praetores uti solent. In ea sunt aedes sacrae complures, sed duae quae longe ceteris antecellant:

 Olympii ceteraeque urbis partes, quae una via lata perpetua multisque transversis divisae privatis aedificiis continentur.
 15 Tertia est urbs, quae, quod in ea parte Fortunaefanum antiquum fuit, Tycha nominata est, in qua gymnasium amplissimum est et complures aedes sacrae: coliturque ea pars et habitatur frequentissime. Quarta autem est, quae quia postruma coaedificata est, Neapolis nominatur: quam

MARCELLUS.

Marcellus Touched Nothing.

LIV. 6. Nunc ad Mārcellum revertar, nē haec ā mē sine causā commemorāta esse videantur: quī cum tam praeclāram urbem vī cōpiisque cēpisset, nōn putāvit ad laudem populī Rōmānī hōc pertinēre, hanc pulchritūdinem, ex quā praesertim periculī nihil ostenderētur, dēlēre et exstinguere. 5 Itaque aedificiis omnibus, pūblicis privātis, sacris profānis, sic pepercit, quasi ad ea dēfendenda cum exercitū, nōn oppūgnanda vēnisset. In ōrnatū urbis habuit victōriae ratiōnem, habuit hūmānitātis. Victōriae putābat esse multa Rōmam dēportāre, quae ōrnamētō urbī esse possent, hūmā- 10 nītātis nōn plānē exspoliāre urbem, praesertim quam cōn-servāre voluisset. 7. In hāc partitiōne ōrnatūs nōn plūs victōria Mārcelli populō Rōmānō appetivit quam hūmānitās Syrācūsānis reservāvit. Rōmam quae apportāta sunt, ad aedem Honōris et Virtūtis itemque aliis in locis vidēmus. 15 Nihil in aedibus, nihil in hortis posuit, nihil in suburbānō: putāvit, sī urbis ōrnamēta domum suam nōn contulisset, domum suam ōrnamētō urbī futūram. Syrācūsīs autem permulta atque ēgregia reliquit: deum vērō nūllum violāvit, nūllum attigit. Cōnferte Verrem: nōn ut hominem cum 20 homine comparētis, nē qua tālī virō mortuō fiat iniūria, sed ut pācem cum bellō, lēgēs cum vī, forum et iūris dictiōnem cum ferrō et armis, adventum et comitātum cum exercitū et victōriā cōnferātis.

Verres Plundered even Temples.

LV. 8. Aedis Minervae est in Însulâ, dē quā ante dixi : quam Mārcellus nōn attigit, quam plēnam atque ōrnātam reliquit : quae ab istō sic spoliāta atque direpta est, nōn ut ab hoste aliquō, quī tamen in bellō religiōnum et cōsuētū-

5 dinis iūra retinēret, sed ut ā barbaris praedōnibus vēxāta esse videātur. Pūgna erat equestris Agathocli rēgis in tabulis picta: hīs autem tabulis interiōrēs templi parietēs vestiēbantur. Nihil erat eā pictūrā nōbilius, nihil Syracūsīs quod magis visendum putārētur. Hās tabulās M. Mārcellus 10 cum omnia victōriā illā sua profāna fēcisset, tamen religiōne impeditus nōn attigit: iste, cum illa iam propter diūturnam pācem fidēlitātemque populī Syracūsānī sacra religiōsaque accēpisset, omnēs eās tabulās abstulit: parietēs, quōrum ōrnātūs tot saecula mānserant, tot bella effūgerant, nūdōs āc dēformātōs reliquit. 9. Et Mārcellus, quī, sī Syracūsās 5 cēpisset, duo templa sē Rōmae dēdicātūrum vōverat, is id, quod erat aedificātūrus, iis rēbus ōrnāre, quās cēperat, nōluit: Verrēs, quī nōn Honōrī neque Virtūtī, quem ad modum ille, sed Venerī et Cupidinī vōta dēbēret, is Minervae templum spoliāre cōnātus est. Ille deōs deōrum spoliis 10 ōrnārī nōluit: hīc ōrnāmenta Minervae virginis in meretriciam domum trānstulit. Vigintī et septem praetereā tabulās pulcherrimē pictās ex eādē aede sustulit: in quibus erant imāginēs Siciliae rēgum āc tyrannōrum, quae nōn solum pictōrum artificīō dēlectābant, sed etiam commemorātiōne 15 hominum et cōgnitiōne formārum. Āc vidēte quantō tae-trior hīc tyrannus Syracūsānus fuerit quam quisquam superiōrum: cum illi tamen ōrnārīnt templa deōrum immortalium, hīc etiam illōrum monumenta atque ōrnāmenta sustulerit.

LVI. 10. Iam vērō quid dē valvīs illius templī com- 20 memorem? Vereor nē, haec quī nōn viderint, omnia mē nimis augēre atque ōrnāre arbitrentur: quod tamen nēmō suspiciārī dēbet, tam esse mē cupidum, ut tot virōs primāriōs velim, praesertim ex iūdicum numerō, quī Syracūsīs fuerint, quī haec viderint, esse temeritātī et mendāciō meō cōnsciōs. 25 Cōfirmāre hōc liquidō, iūdicēs, possum, valvās māgnificentiōrēs, ex aurō atque ēbore perfectiōrēs, nūllās umquam ūllō in templō fuisse. Incredibile dīctū est quam multī Graeci dē hārum valvārum pulchritūdine scrīptum reliquerint.
Nimium forsitan haec illi mīrentur atque efferant. Estō: 30 vērū tamen honestius est rei pūblicae nostrae, iūdicēs, ea quae illis pulchra esse videantur imperātōrem nostrum in bellō reliquisse, quam praetōrem in pāce abstulisse. Ex ebore diligentissimē perfecta argūmenta erant in valvīs : ea dētrahenda cūrāvit omnia. 11. Gorgonis ōs pulcherrimum, cinctum anguibus, revellit atque abstulit : et tamen indicāvit

 5 sē nōn solum artificiō, sed etiam pretiō quaestūque dūcī. Nam bullās aureās omnēs ex iīs valvīs, quae erant multae et gravēs, nōn dubitāvit auferre : quārum iste nōn opere dēlectābātur, sed pondere. Itaque ēius modī valvās reliquit, ut quae ōlim ad ōrnandum templum erant māximē, nunc
 10 tantum ad claudendum factae esse videantur. Etiamne grāmineās hastās — vīdī enim vōs in hōc nōmine, cum testis diceret, commovērī, quod erat ēius modī, ut semel vīdisse satis esset ; in quibus neque manū factum quicquam neque pulchritūdō erat ūlla, sed tantum māgnitūdō incrēdibilis, dē 15 quā vel audīre satis esset, nimium vidēre plūs quam semel — etiam id concupistī ?

Statue of Sappho Stolen.

LVII. 12. Nam Sapphō, quae sublāta dē prytanēō est, dat tibi iūstam excūsātiōnem, prope ut concēdendum atque ignōscendum esse videātur. Silaniōnis opus tam perfectum, 20 tam ēlegāns, tam ēlabōrātum quisquam nōn modo privātus, sed populus potius habēret quam homō ēlegantissimus atque ēruditissimus, Verrēs ? Nīmīrum contrā dīcī nihil potest. Nostrū enim ūnus quisque — quī tam beātī quam iste est nōn sumus, tam dēlicātī esse nōn possumus — sī quandō
 25 aliquid istius modī vidēre volet, eat ad aedem Fēlicitātis, ad monumentum Catulī, in porticum Metellī ; det operam ut admittātur in alicūius istōrum Tusculānum ; spectet forum ōrnātum, sī quid iste suōrum aedilibus commodārit : Verrēs haec habeat domī, Verrēs ōrnāmentōrum fānōrum atque
 30 oppidōrum habeat plēnam domum, villās refertās. Etiamne hūius operārī studia ac dēliciās, iūdicēs, perferētis ? quī ita nātus, ita ēducātus est, ita factus et animō et corpore, ut multō appositior ad ferenda quam ad auferenda signa esse videātur. 13. Atque haec Sapphō sublāta quantum dēsiderium sui reliquerit dīcī vix potest. Nam cum ipsa fuit ēgre-giē facta, tum epigramma Graecum pernōbile incisum est in

14. Quid? sīgnum Paeānis ex aede Aesculāpi praeclārē factum, sacrum āc religiōsum, nōn sustulisti? quod omnēs 10

 5 cum Aesculāpiō apud illōs colebātur: Aristaeus, quī [ut Graecī ferunt, Liberī filius] inventor plei esse dicitur, unā cum Liberō patre apud illōs eōdem erat in templō cōsecrātus.

Statue of Jupiter.

LVIII. 15. Iovem autem Imperātōrem quantō honōre in 10 suō templō fuisse arbitrāminī? Conicere potestis, sī recordārī volueritis quantā religiōne fuerit eādem speciē ac formā signum illud, quod ex Macedoniā captum in Capitōliō posuerat Flāminīnus. Etenim tria ferēbantur in orbe terrārum signa Iovis Imperātōris unō in genere pulcherrimē 15 facta: unum illud Macedonicum, quod in Capitōliō vīdimus; alterum in Pontī ōre et angustiis; tertium, quod Syrācūsīs ante Verrem praetōrem fuit. Illud Flāminīnus ita ex aede suā sustulit, ut in Capitōliō, hōc est, in terrestri domiciliō Iovis pōneret. Quod autem est ad introitum Pontī, id, cum 20 tam multa ex illō mari bella ēmererint, tam multa porrō in Pontum invecta sint, usque ad hanc diem integrum inviolātumque servātum est. Hōc tertium, quod erat Syrācūsīs, quod M. Mārcellus armātus et victor viderat, quod religiōnī concesserat, quod civēs atque incolae Syrācūsānī colere, 25 advenae nōn solum vīsere, vērū etiam venerārī solēbant, id Verrēs ex templō Iovis sustulit.

16. Ut saepius ad Mārcellum revertar, iūdicēs, sic habētōte: plūrēs esse ā Syrācūsānis istius adventū deōs, quam victōriā Mārcelli hominēs dēsiderātōs. Etenim ille requisisse 30 etiam dicitur Archimēdem illum, summō ingeniō hominem ac disciplinā, quem cum audisset interfectum, permolestē tulisse: iste omnia, quae requisivit, nōn ut cōservāret, vērū ut asportāret requisivit.

18. Quid tum? mediocrīne tandem dolōre eōs adfectōs 10 esse arbitrāminī? Nōn ita est, iūdicēs: primum, quod omnēs religiōne moventur, et deōs patriōs, quōs ā māiōribus accēperunt, colendōs sibi diligenter et retinendōs esse arbi-trantur: deinde hīc ōrnātus, haec opera atque artificia, sīgna, tabulae pictae, Graecōs hominēs nimiō opere dēlec- 15
tant. Itaque ex illōrum querimōniīs intellegere possumus, haec illis acerbissima vidērī, quae forsitan nōbis levia et contemnenda esse videantur. Mihi crēdite, iūdicēs — tametsī vōsmet ipsōs haec eadem audire certō sciō, — cum multās accēperint per hōsce annōs socii atque exterae nātiōnēs 20 calamitatēs et iniuriās, nullās Graeci hominēs gravius ferunt āc tulērunt, quam hūiusce modī spoliātiōnēs fānōrum atque

19. Licet iste dicat ēmissee sē, sicutī solet dicere, crēdite hominēs haec vēditāre coepisse, quae tum nōn modo nōn vēnditābant, cum iūdicia fiēbant, vērū etiam coēmēbant; aut nisi arbitrāminī L. Crassō, Q. Scaevolae, C. Claudiō, potentissimīs hominibꝯ, quōrum aedilitātēs ōrnatissimās vīdimus, commercium istārum rērum cum Graecīs hominibꝯ nōn fuisse, 5 eīs quī post iūdiciorū dissolūtiōnem aedilēs factī sunt fuisse.

LX. 20. Acerbiōrem etiam scītōte esse civitātibus falsam istam et simulātam ēmptiōnem, quam sī quī clam surripiat aut ēripiat palam atque auferat. Nam turpitūdinem summam esse arbitrantur referri in tabulās pūblicās, pretiō adductam
 10 civitātem (et pretiō parvō) ea quae accēpisset ā māiōribus vēdidisse atque abaliēnāsse. Etenim mirandum in modum Graeci rēbus istis, quās nōs contemnimus, dēlectantur. Itaque māiōrēs nostri facile patiēbantur, haec esse apud illōs quam plūrima: apud sociōs, ut imperiō nostrō quam 15 ōrnatissimī flōrentissimīque essent: apud eōs autem, quōs vectīgālis aut stipendiāriōs fēcerant, tamen haec relinquēbant, ut illī quibus haec iūcunda sunt, quae nōbīs levia videntur, habērent haec oblectāmenta et sōlācia servitūtis.

21. Quid arbitrāminī Rēginōs, quī iam civēs Rōmānī
 20 sunt, merēre velle, ut ab eīs marmorea Venus illa auferatur? quid Tarentinōs, ut Eurōpam in taurō āmittant? ut Satyrum, quī apud illōs in aede Vestae est? ut cētera? quid Thespiēnsēs, ut Cupīdinis signum [propter quod ūnum visuntur Thespieae]? quid Cnidiōs, ut Venērem marmoream?
 25 quid, ut pictam, Coōs? quid Ephesiōs, ut Alexandrum? quid Cȳzicēnōs, ut Āiācem aut Mēdēam? quid Rhodiōs, ut Iālysum? quid Athēniēnsēs, ut ex marmore Iacchum aut Paralūm pictum aut ex aere Myrōnis būculam? Longūm est et nōn necessārium commemorāre quae apud quōsque vīsenda 30 sunt tōtā Asiā et Graeciā: vērū illud est quam ob rem haec commemorem, quod existimāre hōc vōs volō, mīrum quendam dolōrem accipere eōs, ex quōrum urbibus haec auferantur.

LXIII. 6. Ō nōmen dulce libertātis! Ō iūs eximium nostrae civitātis! Ō lēx Porcia, lēgēsque Semprōniae! 10 Ō graviter dēsiderāta, et aliquandō reddita plēbi Rōmānae, tribūnicia potestās! Hūcine tandem omnia recidērunt, ut cīvis Rōmānus, in prōvinciā populī Rōmānī, in oppidō foederātōrum, ab eō quī beneficiō populī Rōmānī fascis et secūris habēret, dēligātus in forō virgīs caederētur? Quid? 15 cum ignēs ārdentēsque lāminae cēterique cruciātūs admovēbantur, sī tē illius acerba implōrātiō et vōx miserābilis nōn inhibēbat, nē cīvium quidem Rōmānōrum, quī tum aderant, flētū et gemitū māximō commovēbāre? In crucem tū agere ausus es quemquam, quī sē cīvem Rōmānum esse diceret? 20

7. Nōluī tam vehementer agere hōc primā āctiōne, iūdicēs: nōluī. Vidistis enim, ut animī multitudinis in istum dolōre et odiō et commūnis periculī metū concitārentur. Statuī egomet mihi tum modum ōrātiōnī meae, et C. Numitōriō, equitī Rōmānō, primō hominī, testī meō; et Glabriōnem, id 25 quod sapientissimē fēcit, facere laetātus sum, ut repente cōnsilium in mediō testimōniō dīmitteret. Etenim verēbātur nē populus Rōmānus ab istō eās poenās vī repetisse vidērētur, quās veritus esset nē iste lēgibus ac vestrō iūdiciō nōn esset persolūturus. 30

8. Nunc, quoniam exploratum est omnibus quō locō causa tua sit, et quid dē tē futurum sit, sic tēcum agam :
 Gāvium istum, quem repentinum speculātōrem fuisse dicis, ostendam in lautumiās Syrācūsīs abs tē esse coniectum.
 5 Neque id solum ex litteris ostendam Syrācūsānōrum, nē possis dicere mē, quia sit aliquis in litteris Gāvius, hōc fingere et eligere nōmen, ut hunc illum esse possim dicere ;
 sed ad arbitrium tuum testis dabō, quī istum ipsum Syrācūsīs abs tē in lautumiās coniectum esse dicant. Prōdū-10 cam etiam Cōnsānōs, mūnicipēs illius ac necessāriōs, quī tē nunc sērō doceant, iūdicēs nōn sērō, illum P. Gāvium, quem

 15 tuīs patrōnis plāna fēcerō, tum istūc ipsum tenēbō, quod abs tē mihi datur : eō contentum mē esse dicam. Quid enim nūper tū ipse, cum populī Rōmānī clāmōre atque impetū perturbātus exsiluistī, quid, inquam, locūtus es ?
 Illum, quod morām suppliciō quaereret, ideō clāmitāsse sē 20 esse cīvem Rōmānum, sed speculātōrem fuisse. Iam mei testēs vērī sunt. Quid enim dicit aliud C. Numitōrius ?
 quid M. et P. Cottiī, nōbilissimī hominēs, ex agrō Tauromenitānō ? quid Q. Luccēiūs, quī argentāriam Rēgiī māximam fēcit ? quid cēterī ? Adhūc enim testēs ex eō genere ā mē 25 sunt datī, nōn quī nōvisse Gāvium, sed sē vīdisse dīcerent, cum is, quī sē cīvem Rōmānum esse clāmāret, in crucem agerētur. Hōc tū, Verrēs, idem dicis ; hōc tū cōnfītēris illum clāmitāsse, sē cīvem esse Rōmānum ; apud tē nōmen civitātis nē tantum quidem valuisse, ut dubitātiōnem aliparvam moram saltem posset adferre.

POMPEY'S MILITARY COMMAND.

(Prō Lēge Māniliā.)

B.C. 66.

THE last serious resistance to the Roman power in the East was offered by Mithridates VI., king of Pontus, the most formidable enemy encountered by Rome since the death of Hannibal. The dominions of Mithridates embraced the whole eastern coast of the Black Sea (Pontus Euxinus), including the kingdom of Bosphorus (Crimea) on the one hand, and Paphlagonia on the other, while the king of Armenia also was closely allied to him by marriage. There were three several "Mithridatic Wars." In the First the Romans were commanded by Sulla (88-84 B.C.), who gained great successes, and forced Mithridates to pay a large sum of money. In the Second (83-82), a short and unimportant affair, Murena, the Roman commander, was worsted. The Third broke out B.C. 74, and was successfully conducted by Lucius Licinius Lucullus, the ablest general of the aristocracy.

When this war had continued for several years, the democratic faction (populares) took advantage of some temporary reverses sustained by Lucullus, and of the unpopularity of his administration, to revoke his command and give to the consul of B.C. 67, M'. Acilius Glabrio (the same who had presided at the trial of Verres), the eastern war as his "province." The law effecting this change was proposed by the tribune A. Gabinius, one of the most active demagogues of the time. Another law (lex Gabinia), proposed B.C. 67 by the same politician, required the Senate to appoint a commander of consular rank, with extraordinary powers for three years by land and sea, to suppress the piracy which infested every part of the Mediterranean, having its chief seat in Cilicia. It was understood as a matter of course that Gnaeus (or Cneius) Pompey, who had been living in retirement since his consulship, B.C. 70, would receive this appointment. Pompey accomplished his task with the most brilliant success, and in three months had the seas completely cleared. (See below, ch. xii.)

POMPEY.
(Bust in the Vatican.)

Meantime Glabrio had shown himself wholly incompetent to conduct the war against Mithridates, and early in B.C. 66, the tribune Caius Manilius proposed a law extending Pompey's command over the entire East. Power like this was quite inconsistent with the republican institutions of Rome and with the established authority of the Senate; so that the law was of course opposed by the aristocracy (optimates), led by Hortensius and Catulus. Cicero was now prætor. He was no democrat of the school of Gabinius and Cæsar; but on the other hand he had no hereditary sympathies with the Senate, and he probably failed to recognize the revolutionary character of the proposition and considered merely its practical advantages. He therefore advocated the passage of the Manilian law with ardor.

The law was passed, and Pompey fulfilled the most sanguine expectations of his friends. He brought the Mithridatic War to an end, organized the Roman power throughout the East, and returned home, B.C. 61, with greater prestige and glory than had ever been won by any Roman before him.

The Oration on the Manilian Law was Cicero's first political speech. Till now he had been a public-spirited lawyer; from this time on he was essentially a politician, and it is not hard to see how unfavorably his character was influenced by contact with the corrupt politics of that day.

Cicero's Reasons for Addressing a Political Assembly.

QUAMQUAM mihi semper frequēns cōspectus vester multō iūcundissimus, hīc autem locus ad agendum amplissimus, ad dicendum ōrnatissimus est vīsus, Quirītēs, tamen hōc aditū laudis, quī semper optimō cuique mājimē patuit, nōn mea mē voluntās adhūc, sed vītæ meae ratiō-nēs ab ineunte aetāte susceptae prohibuērunt. Nam cum antea per aetātem nōndum hūius auctōritātem loci attingere audērem, statueremque nihil hūc nisi perfectum ingeniō, ēlabōrātum industriā adferri oportere, omne meum tempus

 5 amicōrum temporibus trāsmittendum putāvī. 2. Ita neque hīc locus vacuus umquam fuit ab eīs quī vestram causam dēfenderent, et meus labor, in prīvātōrum periculis castē integrēque versātus, ex vestrō iūdicīō frūctum est amplissimum cōsecūtus. Nam cum propter dilātiōnem comiti-
 10 ōrum ter praetor prīmus centuriis cūctis renūtiātus sum, facile intellēxī, Quiritēs, et quid dē mē iūdicārētis, et quid aliis praescriberētis. Nunc cum et auctōritātis in mē tantum sit, quantum vōs honōribus mandandis esse voluistis, et ad agendum facultātis tantum, quantum hominī vigilantī
 15 ex forēnsi ūsū prope cotidiāna dicendī exercitātiō potuit adferre, certē et sī quid auctōritātis in mē est, apud eōs ūtar quī eam mihi dedērunt, et sī quid in dicendō cōsequi possum, eis ostendam potissimum, quī eī quoque rei frūctum suō iūdicīō tribuendum esse dūxērunt. 3. Atque illud 20 in primis mihi laetandum iūre esse vidēō, quod in hāc insolitā mihi ex hōc locō ratiōne dicendī causa tālis oblāta est, in quā ōrātiō deesse nēminī possit. Dicendum est enim dē Cn. Pompēi singulārī eximiāque virtūte: hūius autem ōrātiōnis difficilior est exitum quam prīncipium invenire.
 25 Ita mihi nōn tam cōpia quam modus in dicendō quaerendus est.

The Situation in Asia.

II. 4. Atque, — ut inde ōrātiō mea proficiscātur, unde haec omnis causa dūcitur, — bellum grave et periculōsum vestris vectigālibus ac sociis ā duōbus potentissimis rēgibus 30 infertur, Mithridāte et Tigrāne, quōrum alter relictus, alter laccessitus, occāsionem sibi ad occupandam Asiam oblātā esse arbitrantur. Equitibus Rōmānīs, honestissimīs virīs, adferuntur ex Asiā cotidiē litterae, quōrum māgnae rēs aguntur in vestris vectigālibus exercendis occupātae : quī ad mē, prō necessitudīne quae mihi est cum illō ōrdine, causam rei pūblīcae perīculaue rērum suārum dētulērunt :

Importance of the Mithridatic War.

6. Causa quae sit vidētis : nunc quid agendū sit cōn-siderāte. Prīmū mihi vidētur dē genere bellī, deinde dē māgnitudīne, tum dē imperātōre dēligendō esse dicendū. Genus est bellī ēius modī, quod māximē vestrōs animōs 15 excitāre atque inflammāre ad persequendī studium dēbeat : in quō agitur populī Rōmānī glōria, quae vōbīs ā māiōribus cum māgnā in omnibus rēbus tum summa in rē militārī trādita est ; agitur salūs sociōrum atque amīcōrum, prō quā multa māiōrēs vestri māgnā et gravia bella gessērunt ; 20 aguntur certissima populī Rōmānī vectigālia et māxima, quibus āmissis et pācis ōrnāmenta et subsidia bellī requī-rētis; aguntur bona multōrum cīvium, quibus est ā vōbīs et ipsōrum et rei pūblicae causā cōsulendum.

III Success of the Former Wars in Asia.

III. 7. Et quoniam semper appetentēs glōriae praeter cēterās gentis atque avidī laudis fuistis, dēlenda est vōbīs
 5 illa macula [Mithridaticō] bellō superiōre concepta, quae penitus iam insēdit ac nimis inveterāvit in populi Rōmānī nōmine, — quod is, quī ūnō diē, tōtā in Asiā, tot in cīvitatibus, ūnō nūntiō atque ūnā significātiōne [litterārum] civis Rōmānōs necandōs trucidandōsque dēnotāvit, nōn modo
 10 adhūc poenam nūllam suō dignam scelere suscepit, sed ab illō tempore annum iam tertium et vicēsimum rēgnat, et ita rēgnat, ut sē nōn Pontī neque Cappadociae latebris occultāre velit, sed ēmergere ex patriō rēgnō atque in vestrīs vectigālibus, hōc est, in Asiae lūce versārī. 8. Etenim
 15 adhūc ita nostrī cum illō rēge contendērunt imperātōrēs, ut ab illō insignia victōriae, nōn victōriam reportārent. Triumphāvit L. Sūlla, triumphāvit L. Mūrēna dē Mithridate, duō fortissimī virī et summī imperātōrēs; sed ita triumphārunt, ut ille pulsus superātusque rēgnāret. Vērūm 20 tamen illis imperātōribus laus est tribuenda quod ēgērunt, venia danda quod reliquērunt, propterea quod ab eō bellō Sūllam in Ītaliā rēs pūblica, Mūrēnam Sūlla revocāvit.

Strength of the Enemy.

IV. 9. Mithridātēs autem omne reliquum tempus nōn ad obliuionem veteris bellī, sed ad comparātiōnem novī con-
 25 tulit: quī [posteā] cum māximās aedificāset ōrnāsetque classis exercitūque permāgnōs quibuscumque ex gentibus potuisset comparāset, et sē Bosporānis finitimis suis bellum inferre simulāret, ūsque in Hispāniā lēgātōs ac litterās mīsīt ad eōs ducēs quibuscum tum bellum gerēbāmus, ut,

 10. Sed tamen alterius partis periculum, Sertōriānae atque Hispāniēnsis, quae multō plūs firmāmenti āc rōboris habēesse videantur. Sed dē Lūcullō dicam aliō locō, et ita 10 dicam, Quiritēs, ut neque vērā laus ei dētrācta ōrātiōne

Is the Roman Spirit Declining?

V. Māiōrēs nostrī saepe mercātōribus aut nāviculāriīs 15 nostris iniūriōsius trāctātis bella gessērunt: vōs, tot milibus cīvium Rōmānōrum ūnō nūntiō atque ūnō tempore

The Allies in Peril: they Call for Pompey.

Quid? quod salūs sociōrum summum in periculum āc dis- 30 crimen vocātur, quō tandem animō ferre dēbētis? Rēgnō est expulsus Ariobarzânēs rēx, socius populi Rōmānī atque amicus; imminent duo rēgēs tōtī Asiae nōn solum vōbīs inimicissimī, sed etiam vestris sociīs atque amicis; civitatēs autem omnēs cūctā Asiā atque Graeciā vestrum auxilium

 5 expectāre propter periculi māgnitudinem cōguntur; imperātōrem ā vōbīs certum dēposcere, cum praesertim vōs alium miseritis, neque audent, neque sē id facere sine summō periculō posse arbitrantur. 13. Vident et sentiunt hōc idem quod vōs,—ūnum virum esse, in quō summa
 10 sint omnia, et eum propter esse, quō etiam carent aegrius; cūius adventū ipsō atque nōmine, tametsi ille ad maritimum bellum vēnerit, tamen impetūs hostium repressōs esse intellegunt āc retardātōs. Hī vōs, quoniam liberē loquī nōn licet, tacitē rogant, ut sē quoque, sicut cēterārum prōvin-
 15 ciārum sociōs, dignōs exīstimētis, quōrum salutem tāli virō commendētis; atque hōc etiam magis, quod cēterōs in prōvinciam ēius modi hominēs cum imperiō mittimus, ut etiam si ab hoste dēfendant, tamen ipsōrum adventūs in urbis sociōrum nōn multum ab hostili expūgnātiōne differant.
 20 Hunc audiēbant antea, nunc praesentem vident, tantā temperantiā, tantā mānsuetūdine, tantā hūmānitāte, ut ei beātissimī esse videantur, apud quōs ille diūtissimē commorātur.

VI. 14. Quā rē si propter sociōs, nullā ipsī iniuriā laces-

 25 lis, cum Poenis bella gessērunt, quantō vōs studiō convenit iniuriis prōvocātōs sociōrum salutem unā cum imperi vestri dignitāte dēfendere, praesertim cum dē māximis vestris vectigālibus agātur? Nam cēterārum prōvinciārum vectigālia, Quiritēs, tanta sunt, ut eis ad ipsās prōvinciās tūtandās vix 30 contentī esse possimus: Asia vero tam opīma est āc fertilis, ut et ūbertāte agrōrum et varietāte fructuum et māgnitudine pāstiōnis et multitudīne eārum rērum quae exportantur, facile omnibus terris antecellat. Itaque haec vōbis prōretinēre vultis, nōn modo ā calamitāte, sed etiam ā metū calamitātis est dēfendenda. 15. Nam in cēteris rēbus cum Exploits of Lucullus.

VIII. 20. Quoniam dē genere belli dixī, nunc dē māgnitūdine pauca dicam. Potest hōc enim dicī, bellī genus esse 5 ita necessārium ut sit gerendum, nōn esse ita māgnū ut sit pertimēscendum. In quō māximē ēlabōrandum est, nē forte ea vōbīs quae diligentissimē prōvidenda sunt, contemnenda esse videantur. Atque ut omnēs intellegant mē L. Lūcullō tantum impertire laudis, quantum fortī virō et sapienti hominī et māgnō imperātōrī dēbeatur, dicō ēius adventū māximās Mithridātī cōpiās omnibus rēbus ōrnātās atque instrūctās fuisse, urbemque Asiae clārissimam nōbīsque amīcissimam, Cŷzicēnōrum, obsessam esse ab ipsō rēge 15 L. Lūcullus virtūte, adsiduitate, cōnsiliō, summīs obsidiōnis periculis liberāvit : 21. ab eōdem imperātōre classem māgnam et ōrnātam, quae ducibus Sertōriānis ad Ītaliā studiō atque odiō inflammāta raperētur, superātā esse atque dēpressā ; māgnās hostium praetereā cōpiās multis proeliis 20 esse dēlētās, patefactumque nostris legiōnibus esse Pontum, quī antea populō Rōmānō ex omnī aditū clausus fuisset ; Sinōpēn atque Amīsum, quibus in oppidis erant domicilia rēgis, omnibus rēbus ōrnātās ac refertās, cēterāsque urbīs Ponti et Cappadociae permultās, ūnō aditū adventūque esse 25 captās ; rēgem, spoliātum rēgnō patriō atque avitō, ad aliōs sē rēgēs atque ad aliās gentis supplicem contulisse ; atque haec omnia salvīs populī Rōmānī sociis atque integrīs vectigālibus esse gesta. Satis opīnor haec esse laudis, atque ita, Quirītēs, ut hōc vōs intellegātis, ā nūllō istōrum, quī huic 30 obtrectant lēgī atque causae, L. Lūcullum similiter ex hōc locō esse laudātum.

The War still a Great One.

IX. 22. Requirētur fortasse nunc quem ad modum, cum haec ita sint, reliquum possit māgnū esse bellum. Cōgnōscite, Quiritēs. Nōn enim hōc sine causā quaerī vidētur. Primum ex suō rēgnō sic Mithridātēs profūgit, ut ex eōdem
 5 Pontō Mēdēa illa quondam profūgissee dicitur, quam praedicant in fugā frātris suī membra in eis locis, quā sē parēs persequerētur, dissipāvisse, ut eōrum conlēctiō dispersa, maerorque patrius, celeritātem persequendi retardāret. Sic Mithridātēs fugiēns māximam vim aurī atque argentī pul-
 10 cherrimārumque rērum omnium, quās et ā māiōribus accēperat et ipse bellō superiōre ex tōtā Asiā direptās in suum rēgnū congesserat, in Pontō omnem reliquit. Haec dum nostrī conligunt omnia diligentius, rēx ipse ē manibus effūgit. Ita illum in persequendi studiō maeror, hōs laetitia
 15 tardāvit. 23. Hunc in illō timōre et fugā Tigrānēs rēx Armenius excēpit, diffidentemque rēbus suis cōfirmāvit, et adflictum ērēxit, perditumque recreāvit. Cūius in rēgnū postea quam L. Lūcullus cum exercitū vēnit, plūrēs etiam gentēs contrā imperātōrem nostrum concitātae sunt. Erat
 20 enim metus iniectus eis nātiōnibus, quās numquam populus Rōmānus neque lacesse dās bellō neque temptandās putāvit: erat etiam alia gravis atque vehemēs opiniō, quae animōs gentium barbarārum pervāserat, fānī locuplētissimī et religiōsissimī diripiendi causā in eas ōrās nostrum esse
 25 exercitū adductum. Ita nātiōnēs multae atque māgnae novō quōdam terrōre ac metū concitābantur. Noster autem exercitus, tametsi urbem ex Tigrānī rēgnō cēperat, et proeliis ūsus erat secundis, tamen nimia longinquitāte locōrum ac dēsideriō suōrum commovēbātur.

Mithridates Defeated but not Subdued.

30 24. Hic iam plūra nōn dīcam. Fuit enim illud extrēmum ut ex eis locis ā militibus nostrīs reditus magis mātūrus quam prōcessiō longior quaererētur. Mithridātēs autem et suam manum iam cōfirmārat, [et eōrum] quī sē ex ipsius rēgnō conlēgerant, et māgnīs adventiciis auxiliis multōrum rēgum et nātiōnum iuvābātur. Iam hōc ferē sic fieri solēre accēpimus, ut rēgum adflictae fortunae facile multōrum opēs adliciant ad misericordiam, māximēque eōrum quī aut rēgēs sunt aut vīvunt in rēgnō, ut eis nōmen rēgāle māgnum et sānctum esse videātur. 25. Itaque tantum victus efficere potuit, quantum incolumis numquam est ausus optāre. Nam cum sē in rēgnum suum recēpisset, nōn fuit eō contentus, 10 quod eī praeter spem acciderat, — ut illam, postea quam pulsus erat, terram umquam attingeret, — sed in exercitum nostrum clārum atque victōrem impetum fēcit. Sinite hōc locō, Quiritēs, sicut poētae solent, quī rēs Rōmānās scribunt, praeterire mē nostram calamitātem, quae tanta fuit, ut eam ad auris [Lūculi] imperātōris nōn ex proeliō nūntius, sed ex sermōne rūmor adferret.

Lucullus Superseded.

5 26. Hic in illō ipsō malō gravissimāque belli offēnsiōne, L. Lūcullus, quī tamen aliquā ex parte eīs incommodis medērī fortasse potuisset, vestrō iūssū coāctus, — quī imperi diuturnitātī modum statuendum vetere exemplō putāvistis, —
 10 partem militum, quī iam stipendiis cōfecti erant, dīmisit, partem M'. Glabriōnī trādīdit. 15 X. 27. Satis mihi multa verba fēcisse videor, quā rē esset hōc bellum genere ipsō necessārium, māgnitūdine periculōsum. Restat ut dē imperātōre ad id bellum dēligendō ac tantis rēbus praeficiendō dīcendum esse videātur.

Pompey's Military Experience.

Utinam, Quiritēs, virōrum fortium atque innocentium
 20 cōpiam tantam habērētis, ut haec vōbis dēliberātiō difficilis esset, quemnam potissimum tantis rēbus ac tantō bellō praeficiendum putārētis! Nunc vērō — cum sit ūnus Cn. Pompēius, quī nōn modo eōrum hominum quī nunc sunt glōriam, sed etiam antīquitātis memoriam virtūte superārit 25 — quae rēs est quae cuiusquam animum in hāc causā dubium facere possit? 28. Ego enim sic existimō, in summō imperātōre quattuor hās rēs inesse oportēre, — scientiam rei militāris, virtūtem, auctōritātem, fēlicitātem. Quis igitur hōc homine scientior umquam aut fuit aut esse dēbuit?

quī ē lūdō atque ē pueritiae disciplinīs bellō māximō atque acerrimīs hostibus ad patris exercitum atque in militiae disciplinam profectus est; quī extrēmā pueritiā miles in exercitū fuit summī imperātōris, ineunte adulēscientiā māximī ipse exercitūs imperātor; quī saepius cum hoste cōnfluxit 5 quam quisquam cum inimicō concertāvit, plūra bella gessit quam cēteri lēgērunt, plūrēs prōvinciās cōnfēcit quam alii concupivērunt; cūius adulēscientia ad scientiam rei militāris nōn aliēnis praeceptis sed suis imperiīs, nōn offēnsiōnibus belli sed victōriīs, nōn stipendiīs sed triumphis est ērudita. 10 Quod dēnique genus esse belli potest, in quō illum nōn exercuerit fortūna rei pūblīcae? Cīvile, Āfricānum, Trāns-alpīnum, Hispāniēse [mixtum ex cīvitātibus atque ex bellī-cōsissimis nātiōnibus], servile, nāvāle bellum, varia et dīversa genera et bellōrum et hostium, nōn solum gesta ab hōc ūnō, 15 sed etiam cōnfecta, nūllam rem esse dēclārant in ūsū positam militārī, quae hūius virī scientiam fugere possit.

XI. 29. Iam vērō virtūti Cn. Pompēi quae potest ōrātiō pār invenīri? Quid est quod quisquam aut illō dignum aut vōbīs novum aut cuiquam inauditum possit adferre? 20 Neque enim illae sunt sōlae virtūtēs imperātōriae, quae volgō exīstimantur, — labor in negōtiīs, fortitūdō in periculīs, industria in agendō, celeritās in cōnficiendō, cōnsilium in prōvidendō: quae tanta sunt in hōc ūnō, quanta in omnibus reliquīs imperātōribus, quōs aut vidimus, aut audivimus, nōn 25 fuērunt. 30. Testis est Ītalia, quam ille ipse victor L. Sūlla hūius virtūte et subsidiō cōnfessus est liberātam. Testis est Sicilia, quam multis undique cīnctam periculīs nōn terrōre bellī, sed cōnsilī celeritāte explicāvit. Testis est Āfrica, quae, māgnīs oppressa hostium cōpiīs, eōrum ipsōrum san- 30 guine redundāvit. Testis est Gallia, per quam legiōnibus nostrīs iter in Hispāniam Gallōrum interneciōne patefactum

est. Testis est Hispānia, quae saepissimē plūrimōs hostis ab hōc superātōs prōstrātōsque cōspēxit. Testis est iterum et saepius Italia, quae cum servilī bellō taetrō periculōsōque explōrāvit; inde Sardiniam cum classe vēnit, atque haec tria frūmentāria subsidia rei pūblicae firmissimīs praesidiīs classibusque mūnivit; 35. inde cum sē in Ītaliā recēpisset, duābus Hispāniis et Galliā [trānsalpīnā] praesidiis ac 5 tam longē lātēque dispersum, quō bellō omnēs gentēs ac nātiōnēs premēbantur, Cn. Pompēius extrēmā hieme apparāvit, ineunte vēre suscepit, mediā aestāte cōnfēcit.

XIII. 36. Est haec divīna atque incrēdibilis virtūs imperā-tōris. Quid cēterae, quās paulō ante commemorāre coepe- 20 ram, quantae atque quam multae sunt? Nōn enim bellandi virtūs solum in summō ac perfectō imperātōre quaerenda est, sed multae sunt artēs eximiae hūius administrāe comitēsque virtūtis. Ac primum, quantā innocentia dēbent esse imperātōrēs? quantā deinde in omnibus rēbus temperantiā? 25 quantā fidē? quantā facilitāte? quantō ingeniō? quantā hūmānitāte? Quae breviter quālia sint in Cn. Pompēiō cōnsiderēmus: summa enim omnia sunt, Quiritēs, sed ea magis ex aliōrum contentiōne quam ipsa per sēsē cōgnōsci atque intellegi possunt. 37. Quem enim imperātōrem possu- 30 mus ūllō in numerō putāre, cūius in exercitū centuriātūs vēneant atque vēnierint? Quid hunc hominem māgnū aut amplum de re publicā cōgitāre, quī pecūniam, ex aerariō dēprōptam ad bellum administrandum, aut propter cupidi-tatem prōvinciae magistratibus dīviserit, aut propter avāritiam Rōmae in quaestū reliquerit? Vestra admurmuratiō 5 facit, Quiritēs, ut āgnōscere videāminī quī haec fēcerint :

 ego autem nōminō nēminem ; quā rē irāscī mihi nēmō poterit, nisi quī ante dē sē voluerit cōfiterī. Itaque propter hanc avāritiam imperatōrum quantās calamitatēs, quōcum-que ventum est, nostrī exercitūs ferant quis īgnōrat? 38. Iti-10 nera quae per hōsce annōs in Italiā per agrōs atque oppida cīvium Rōmānōrum nostrī imperatōrēs fēcerint recordāminī :
 tum facilius statuētis quid apud exterās nātiōnēs fierī existi-mētis. Utrum plūris arbitrāminī per hōsce annōs militum vestrōrum armīs hostium urbīs, an hibernīs sociōrum civi-15 tātēs esse dēlētās? Neque enim potest exercitum is conti-nēre imperatōr, quī sē ipse nōn continet, neque sevērus esse in iūdicandō, quī aliōs in sē sevērōs esse iūdicēs nōn volt.
 39. Hic mirāmur hunc hominem tantum excellere cēteris, cūius legiōnēs sic in Asiā pervēnerint, ut nōn modo manus 20 tantī exercitūs, sed nē vestigium quidem cuiquam pācātō nocuisse dicātur? Iam vērō quem ad modum militēs hiber-nent cotidiē sermōnēs ac litterae perferuntur : nōn modo ut sūmptum faciat in militem nēminī vis adfertur, sed nē cupientī quidem cuiquam permittitur. Hiemis enim, nōn avā-

XIV. 40. Age vērō : cēteris in rēbus quālī sit temperantiā bilem cursum inventum putātis? Nōn enim illum eximia 30 vīs rēmigum aut ars inaudita quaedam gubernandī aut ventī aliquī novī tam celeriter in ultimās terrās pertulērunt ; sed eae rēs quae cēterōs remorārī solent, nōn retardārunt ; nōn avāritia ab institūtō cursū ad praedam aliquam dēvocāvit, nōn libidō ad voluptātem, nōn amoenitās ad dēlectātiōnem, nōn nōbilitās urbis ad cōgnitiōnem, nōn dēnique labor ipse ad quiētem; postrēmō signa et tabulās cēteraque ōrnāmenta Graecōrum oppidōrum, quae cēteri tollenda esse arbitrantur, 5 ea sibi ille nē vīsenda quidem exīstimāvit. 41.  5 sociōs existimārī putātis, quam hostēs omnēs omnium generum sāctissimam iūdicārint? Hūmānitāte iam tantā est, ut difficile dictū sit utrum hostēs magis virtutem eius pūgnantēs timuerint, an mānsuētūdinem victi dilēxerint. Et quisquam dubitābit quīn huic hōc tantum bellum trāsmittendum sit, quī ad omnia nostrae memoriae bella cōficienda 10 divinō quōdam cōnsiliō nātus esse videātur?

His Prestige as a Commander.

XV. 43. Et quoniam auctōritās quoque in bellis administrandis multum atque in imperiō militārī valet, certē nēminī dubium est quīn eā rē idem ille imperātor plūrimum possit.
 15 Vehementer autem pertinēre ad bella administranda quid hostēs, quid socii dē imperātōribus nostris existiment quis ignōrat, cum sciāmus hominēs in tantis rēbus, ut aut contemnant aut metuant aut ōderint aut ament, opīniōne nōn minus et fāmā quam aliquā ratiōne certā commovērī? Quod 20 igitur nōmen umquam in orbe terrārum clārius fuit? cūius rēs gestae parēs? dē quō homine vōs, — id quod māximē facit auctōritātem, — tanta et tam praeclāra iūdicia fēcistis?
44. An vērō ūllam ūsquam esse ōram tam dēsertam putātis, quō nōn illius diēi fāma pervāserit, cum ūniversus populus 25 Rōmānus, refertō forō complētisque omnibus templis ex quibus hīc locus cōspici potest, ūnum sibi ad commūne omnium gentium bellum Cn. Pompēium imperātōrem dēpoposcit? Itaque — ut plūra nōn dīcam, neque aliōrum exemplis cōfirmem quantum [hūius] auctōritās valeat in bellō —
 30 ab eōdem Cn. Pompēiō omnium rērum ēgregiārum exempla sūmantur: quī quō diē ā vōbis maritimō bellō praepositus est imperātor, tanta repente vilitās annōnae ex summā inopiā et cāritāte rei frūmentāriae cōsecūta est ūnūs hominis spē āc nōmine, quantam vix in summā ubertāte agrōrum diūturna pāx effīcere potuisset. 45. Iam acceptā in Pontō calamitāte cum socii pertimuisent, hostium opēs animique crēvisent, 5 satis firmum praesidium prōvincia nōn habēret, — āmisissētis Asiam, Quiritēs, nisi ad ipsum discrīmen ēius temporis divi-attulisset. Huius adventus et Mithridātem insolitā inflammātum victōriā continuit, et Tigrānem magnīs cōpiis mini- 10 tantem Asiae retardāvit. Et quisquam dubitābit quid virtūte perfectūrus sit, quī tantum auctōritāte perfēcerit? aut quam facile imperiō atque exercitū sociōs et vectigālīa cōservātūrus sit, quī ipsō nōmine āc rūmōre dēfenderit?

possumus, sicut aequum est hominēs dē potestāte deōrum) timidē et pauca dicāmus. Ego enim sic existimō: Māximō, Mārcellō, Scipiōnī, Mariō, et cēterīs māgnīs imperātōribus nōn solum propter virtutem, sed etiam propter fortunam saepius
 5 imperia mandāta atque exercitūs esse commissōs. Fuit enim profectō quibusdam summīs virīs quaedam ad amplitudinem et ad glōriam et ad rēs māgnās bene gerendās divinitus adiūncta fortuna. Dē hūius autem hominis felicitāte, dē quō nunc agimus, hāc ūtar moderātiōne dicendī, nōn ut in 10 illius potestāte fortunam positam esse dicam, sed ut praeterita meminisse, reliqua spērāre videāmur, nē aut invisa dīs immortalibus ōrātiō nostra aut ingrāta esse videātur. 48. Itaque nōn sum praedicātūrus quantās ille rēs domī militiae, terrā marique, quantāque felicitāte gesserit; ut eius semper
 15 voluntātibus nōn modo cīvēs adsēnserint, socii obtemperārint, hostēs obēdierint, sed etiam ventī tempestātēque obsecundārint: hōc brevissimē dicam, nēminem umquam tam impudentem fuisse, quī ab dīs immortalibus tot et tantās rēs tacitus auderet optāre, quot et quantās dī immortalēs
 20 ad Cn. Pompēium dētulērunt. Quod ut illi proprium ac perpetuum sit, Quiritēs, cum commūnis salutis atque imperitum ipsius hominis causā, sicuti facitis, velle et optāre debētis.

49. Quā rē, — cum et bellum sit ita necessārium ut negligi Brilliant Success of the Gabinian Law.

XIX. 56. Bonō tē animō tum, Q. Hortēnsī, populus Rōmānus et cēterōs quī erant in eādē sententiā, dicere 10 existimāvit eā quae sentiēbātis: sed tamen in salūte com-mūnī idē populus Rōmānus dolōrī suō māluit quam auctōritātī vestrae obtemperāre. Itaque ūna lēx, ūnus vir, ūnus annus nōn modo nōs illā miserīā ac turpitūdine liberāvit, sed etiam effēcit, ut aliquandō vērē vidērēmur omnibus gen- 15 tibus ac nātiōnibus terrā marīque imperāre. 57. Quō mihi etiam indīgnius vidētur obtrectātum esse adhūc, — Gabīniō dicam ane Pompēiō, an utrique, id quod est vērīus? — nē legārētur A. Gabīnius Cn. Pompēiō expetentī ac postulantī. Utrum ille, quī postulat ad tantum bellum lēgātum 20 quem velit, idōneus nōn est quī impetret, cum cēterī ad expīlandōs sociōs diripiendāsque prōvinciās quōs voluērunt lēgātōs ēdūxerint; an ipse, cūius lēge salūs āc dīgnitās populō Rōmānō atque omnibus gentibus cōstitutā est, expers esse dēbet glōriae ēius imperātōris atque ēius exercitūs, quī cōnsiliō ipsius āc periculō est cōstitutus? 58. An C. Falcidius, Q. Metellus, Q. Caelius Latīniēnsis, Cn. Lentulus, quōs omnis honōris causā nōminō, cum tribūnī plēbī fuissent, annō proximō lēgātī esse potuērunt: in ūnō Gabiniō sunt tam diligentēs, quī in hōc bellō, quod lēge Gabiniā geritur, in hōc imperātōre atque exercitū, quem per vōs 10 ipse cōstituit, etiam praecipuō iūre esse dēberet? Dē quō lēgandō cōsulēs spērō ad senātum relātūrōs. Quī sī dubitābunt aut gravābuntur, ego mē profiteor relātūrum. Neque mē impedit cūiusquam inimicum ēdictum, quō minus vōbīs frētus vestrum iūs beneficiumque dēfendam; neque praeter 15 intercessiōnem quicquam audiam, dē quā (ut arbitror) istī ipsī, quī minantur, etiam atque etiam quid liceat cōsiderābunt. Meā quidem sententiā, Quiritēs, ūnus A. Gabinius bellī maritimī rērumque gestārum Cn. Pompēiō socius ascribitur, proptereā quod alter ūnī illud bellum suscipiendum 20 vestris suffrāgiis dētulit, alter dēlātum susceptumque cōfēcit.

Catulus Answered: Breach of Precedent not Unheard of.

XX. 59. Reliquum est ut dē Q. Catulī auctōritāte et sententiā dicendum esse videātur. Quī cum ex vōbīs quaereret, sī in ūnō Cn. Pompēiō omnia pōnerētis, sī quid eō factum 25 esset, in quō spem essētis habitūrī, — cēpit māgnū suae virtūtis fructum āc dīgnitātis, cum omnēs ūnā prope vōce in [eō] ipsō vōs spem habitūrōs esse dixistis. Etenim tālis est vir, ut nūlla rēs tanta sit āc tam difficilis, quam ille nōn et cōnsiliō regere et integritāte tuērī et virtūte cōficere possit. 30 Sed in hōc ipsō ab eō vehementissimē dissentīō, quod, quō minus certa est hominum āc minus diūturna vīta, hōc magis rēs pūblica, dum per deōs immortālīs licet, fruī dēbet summī virī vītā atque virtūte. 60. 'At enim nē quid novī fiat contrā exempla atque institūta māiōrum.' Nōn dīcam hōc locō māiōrēs nostrōs semper in pāce cōsuētūdini, in bellō ūtilitātī pāruisse; semper ad novōs cāsūs temporum novōrum cōsiliōrum ratiōnēs adcommodāsse: nōn dīcam duo bella māxima, Pūnicum atque Hispāniēse, ab ūnō imperā- 5 tōre esse cōnfecta, duāsque urbīs potentissimās, quae huic imperiō māximē minitābantur, Karthāginem atque Numan-tiam, ab eōdem Scipiōne esse dēlētās: nōn commemorābō nūper ita vōbīs patribusque vestris esse visum, ut in ūnō C. Mariō spēs imperī pōnerētur, ut idem cum Iugurthā, 10 idem cum Cimbris, idem cum Teutonīs bellum administrāret.

61. In ipsō Cn. Pompēiō, in quō novī cōstituī nihil volt Q. Catulus, quam multa sint nova summā Q. Catuli voluntāte cōstitutā recordāminī. XXI. Quid tam novum quam adūlescentulum privātum exercitum difficili rei pūblicae tem- 15 pore cōficere? Cōnfēcit. Huic praeesse? Praefuit. Rem optimē ductū suō gerere? Gessit. Quid tam praeter cōsuētūdinem quam hominī peradūlescentī, cūius aetās ā senātōriō gradū longē abesset, imperium atque exercitum dari, Siciliam permittī, atque Āfricam bellumque in eā prōvinciā 20 administrandum? Fuit in his prōvinciīs singulārī innocentīā, gravitatē, virtūte: bellum in Āfricā māximum cōnfēcit, victōrem exercitum dēportāvit. Quid vērō tam inaudītum quam equitem Rōmānum triumphāre? At eam quoque rem populus Rōmānus nōn modo vīdit, sed omnium etiam studiō 25 visendam et concelebrandam putāvit. 62. Quid tam inūsītātum quam ut, cum duo cōsulēs clārissimī fortissimīque essent, eques Rōmānus ad bellum māximum formīdolōsissimumque prō cōsule mitterētur? Missus est. Quō quidem tempore, cum esset nōn nēmō in senātū quī diceret 30 nōn oportēre mittī hominem privātum prō cōsule, L. Philippus dixisse dīcitur nōn sē illum suā sententiā prō cōsule, sed prō cōsulibus mittere. Tanta in eō rei pūblicae bene gerendae spēs cōstituēbātur, ut duōrum cōsulum mūnus ūnius adulēscentis virtūti committerētur. Quid tam singulāre quam ut ex senātūs cōsultō lēgibus solūtus cōsul ante fieret, quam ūllum alium magistrātum per lēgēs capere licuisset?

 quid tam incrēdibile quam ut iterum eques Rōmānus ex 5 senātūs cōsultō triumphāret? Quae in omnibus hominibus nova post hominum memoriā cōstitūta sunt, ea tam multa nōn sunt quam haec, quae in hōc ūnō homine vidēmus. 63. Atque haec tot exempla, tanta ac tam nova, pro-fecta sunt in eundem hominem ā Q. Catulī atque ā cēterōrum 10 eiusdem dignitātis amplissimōrum hominum auctōritāte.

Judgment of the People should Overrule such Objections.

XXII. Quā rē videant nē sit perinīquum et nōn ferundum, illōrum auctōritātem dē Cn. Pompēi dignitāte ā vōbīs comprobātam semper esse, vestrum ab illīs dē eōdem homine iūdicium populīque Rōmānī auctōritātem improbārī; prae-15 sertim cum iam suō iūre populus Rōmānus in hōc homine suam auctōritātem vel contrā omnis quī dissentīunt possit dēfendere, proptereā quod, isdem istīs reclāmantibus, vōs ūnum illum ex omnibus dēlēgistis quem bellō praedōnum praepōnerētis. 64. Hōc sī vōs temerē fēcistis, et rei pūbli-20 cae parum cōsuluistis, rēctē istī studia vestra suis cōsiliīs regere cōnantur. Sīn autem vōs plūs tum in rē publicā vidistis, vōs eis repūgnantibus per vōsmet ipsōs dignitātem huic imperiō, salūtem orbī terrārum attulistis, aliquandō istī principēs et sibi et cēteris populi Rōmānī ūniversī auctōritātī 25 pārendum esse fateantur.

Pompey Alone can Retrieve the Roman Reputation.

Atque in hōc bellō Asiaticō et rēgiō nōn solum militāris illa virtūs, quae est in Cn. Pompēiō singulāris, sed aliae quoque virtūtēs animī māgnae et multae requiruntur. Difficile est in Asiā, Ciliciā, Syriā rēgnisque interiōrum nātiōnum 30 ita versārī nostrum imperātōrem, ut nihil aliud nisi dē hoste

ac de laude cogitet. Deinde etiam si qui sunt pudore ac temperantia moderatiores, tamen eos esse tales propter multitudinem cupidorum hominum neminem arbitratur. 65. Difficile est dictum, Quirites, quanto in odio simus apud exterarum nationes propter eorum, quos ad eas per hos annos cum imperio misimus, libidines et iniurias. Quod enim fanum putatis in illis terris nostris magistratibus religiosum, quam civitatem sanctam, quam domum satis clausam ac munitam fuisse? Urbes iam locupletes et copiosae requiruntur, quibus causa belli propter diripiendi cupiditatem inferatur. 66. Libenter haec coram cum Q. Catulo et Q. Hortensio, summis et clarissimis viris, disputarem. Novērunt enim sociorum volnera, vident eorum calamitates, querimoniis audiunt. Pro sociis vos contra hostis exercitum mittere putatis, an hostium simulatione contra socios atque amicos? Quae civitas est in Asia quae non modo imperatoris aut legati, sed unius tribuni militum animos ac spiritus capere possit?

XXIII. Quam rem, etiam si quem habetis qui conlatis signis exercitus regiones superare posse videatur, tamen nisi erit idem, qui [se] a pecuniis sociorum, qui ab eorum coniugibus ac liberis, qui ab ornamentis fanorum atque oppidorum, qui ab auro gazaque regia manus, oculos, animum cohibere possit, non erit idoneus qui ad bellum Asiaticum regiumque mittatur. 67. Ecquam putatis civitatem pacatam fuisse quae locuples sit? ecquam esse locupletem quae istis pacata esse videatur? Ora maritima, Quirites, Cn. Pompeium non solum propter rei militaris gloriam, sed etiam propter animi continentiam requisivit. Videbat enim praetores locupletari quot annis pecuniam publicam praeter paucos; neque eos quicquam aliud adsequi, classium nomine, nisi ut detrimentis accipiendis maiore adfieri turpitudine videremur. Nunc quam cupiditate homines in provincias, quibus iacturis et quibus condicionibus proficiscantur, ignorant videlicet isti, quī ad ūnum dēferenda omnia esse nōn arbitrantur? Quasi vērō Cn. Pompēium nōn cum suis virtūtibus tum etiam ali-enis vitiis māgnū esse videāmus. 68. Quā rē nōlite dubitāre quī huic ūnī crēdātis omnia, quī inter tot annōs ūnus 5 inventus sit, quem socii in urbīs suās cum exercitū vēnisse gaudeant.

Favorable Opinions of Leading Men.

Quod si auctōritātibus hanc causam, Quiritēs, cōfirman-dam putātis, est vōbīs auctor vir bellōrum omnium māxi-mārūque rērum perītissimus, P. Servilius, cūius tantae rēs 10 gestae terrā marique exstitērunt, ut cum dē bellō dēliberētis, auctor vōbīs gravior nēmō esse dēbeat; est C. Cūriō, summīs vestris beneficiis māximisque rēbus gestis, summō ingeniō et prūdentiā praeditus; est Cn. Lentulus, in quō omnēs prō amplissimis vestris honōribus summum cōnsilium, summam 15 gravitātem esse cōgnōvistis; est C. Cassius, integritāte, virtūte, cōstantiā singulārī. Quā rē vidēte ut hōrum auctōritātibus illōrum ōrātiōnī, quī dissentiunt, respondēre posse videāmur.

Peroration.

dēferō : 70. testorque omnis deōs, et eōs māximē quī huic locō templōque praesident, quī omnium mentis eōrum quī ad rem pūblicam adeunt māximē perspiciunt, mē hōc neque rogātū facere cūiusquam, neque quō Cn. Pompēi grātiā mihi per hanc causam conciliārī putem, neque quō mihi ex 5 cūiusquam amplitūdine aut praesidia periculīs aut adiūmenta honōribus quaeram ; proptereā quod pericula facile, ut hominem praestāre oportet, innocentīā tēctī repellēmus, honōrem autem neque ab ūnō neque ex hōc locō, sed eādem illā nostrā labōriōsissimā ratiōne vitāe, sī vestra voluntās feret, 10 cōsequēmur. 71. Quam ob rem quicquid in hāc causā mihi susceptum est, Quirītēs, id ego omne mē reī pūblīcae causā suscēpisse cōfirmō ; tantumque abest ut aliquam mihi bonam grātiā quaesisse videar, ut multās mē etiam similitātēs partim obscurās, partim apertās intellegam mihi nōn 15 necessariās, vōbis nōn inūtilis suscēpisse. Sed ego mē hōc honōre praeditum, tantis vestris beneficiis adfectum statui, Quirītēs, vestram voluntātem et reī pūblīcae dignitātem et salūtem prōvinciārum atque sociōrum meis omnibus commodis et ratiōnibus praeferre oportēre. 20

THE CONSPIRACY OF CATILINE.

B.C. 63.

LUCIUS SERGIUS CATILINE was a Roman noble of ruined fortunes and the vilest character; he was an intimate friend of Verres, the plunderer of Sicily, and was, like him, distinguished for an infamous career in the army of Sulla. Fearless, ambitious, and unscrupulous, such a man was well adapted to act as ringleader in arraying the discontented elements of Roman society in any desperate enterprise against the state.

The absence of Pompey in the East, by removing from Rome the only man powerful enough to maintain order, gave Catiline his opportunity. He expected, probably, to make himself tyrant, as Dionysius and Agathocles—men no better than he—had done in Syracuse; but it was suspected at the time, and is believed by many at the present day, that he was, after all, only a tool of Cæsar and Crassus, the leaders of the democratic party.

Catiline's plan was to make use of the consulship as a stepping-stone to absolute power; and accordingly he desired to be a candidate for this office for the year B.C. 65. He was shut out both that year and the next, on account of a charge of repetundæ pending against him; but of this he was at last acquitted in season to present himself for the year B.C. 63. There followed a very exciting canvass, which resulted in the election of Cicero, the candidate of the moderate party, by an overwhelming majority, while a confederate of Catiline, Caius Antonius,—who was son of the distinguished orator, and uncle of the triumvir,—was elected as his colleague. Catiline, nothing daunted, offered himself again at the next election. This time, however, he found himself opposed by both consuls. For Cicero had transferred the rich province of Macedonia, which had fallen to him for his proconsular year, to Antonius, and had thus obtained the coöperation of the latter in procuring the defeat of Catiline.

Catiline now gave up the attempt to gain his ends by means of the consulship, and conspired with other men of desperate fortunes for an immediate outbreak. As a private citizen he had lost the advantages which the consulship would have given him, and even among his associates the only conspirator who held a magistracy was the vain and indolent Lentulus, prætor and of consular rank. In the course of October, B.C. 63, a body of troops was collected at Fæsulæ (now Fiesole, close to Florence) by the conspirators; this was put in command of the centurion Caius Manlius, Catiline himself remaining in the city to direct operations there. Cicero, however, had kept track of every move of the conspiracy, and, in consequence of his representations, the Senate, October 21, invested the consuls with dictatorial power. On November 7 Cicero called a special meeting of the Senate in the temple of Jupiter Stator. Catiline had the effrontery to appear in his usual place, whereupon Cicero burst upon him with the fiery invective which follows—the first of his four “Orations against Catiline.”

This speech, probably the best known of all Roman orations, is a striking example both of Cicero’s power and of that violent invective which was one of the characteristics of Roman oratory.

I. INVECTIVE AGAINST CATILINE.

IN THE SENATE, NOV. 7.

Effrontery of Catiline.

QUO ūsque tandem abūtēre, Catilina, patientiā nostrā? Quam diū etiam furor iste tuus nōs ēlūdet? Quem ad finem sēsē effrēnāta iactābit audācia? Nihilne tē nocturnum praesidium Palāti, nihil urbis vigiliae, nihil timor populī, nihil concursus bonōrum omnium, nihil hic Culpable Weakness of the Consuls.

2. Ō tempora! Ō mōrēs! Senātus haec intellegit, cōn-sul videt: hic tamen vivit. Vivit? immō vērō etiam in senātum venit, fit pūblici cōnsili particeps, notat et dēsīgnat 10 oculis ad caedem ūnum quemque nostrūm. Nōs autem, fortēs virī, satis facere rei pūblicae vidēmur, sī istius furō-rem ac tēla vitēmus. Ad mortem tē, Catilīna, dūcī iūssū cōnsulis iam pridem oportēbat; in tē cōferri pestem quam tū in nōs [iam diū] māchināris. 3. An vērō vir amplissimus, 15 P. Scīpiō, pontifex māximus, Ti. Gracchum mediōcritē labefactantem statum rei pūblicae privātus interfēcīt: Catilinam, orbem terrae caedē atque incendiis vāstāre cupientem, nōs cōnsulēs perferēmus? Nam illa nimis antiqua praetereō, quod C. Servilius Ahāla Sp. Maelium novis rēbus studentem 20 manū suā occīdit. Fuit, fuit ista quondam in hāc rē pūblicā virtūs, ut virī fortēs acriōribus suppliciis civem perniciosum quam acerbissimum hostem coērcērent. Habēmus senātūs cōnsultum in tē, Catilīna, vehemēns et grave. Nōn deēst rei pūblicae cōnsilium, neque auctōritās hūius ōrdinis: nōs, 25 nōs, dicō apertē, cōnsulēs dēsumus.

Contrast with Former Magistrates.

II. 4. Dēcrēvit quondam senātus, ut L. Opīmius cōnsul vidēret nē quid rēs pūblica dētrimentī caperet. Nox nūlla intercessit: interfectus est propter quāsdam sēditiōnum suspiciōnēs C. Gracchus, clārissimō patre, avō, māiōribus; occī-30 sus est cum liberis M. Fulvius cōsulārīs. Simili senātūs cōsultō C. Mariō et L. Valeriō cōsulibus est permissa rēs pūblica: num ūnum diem postea L. Sātūrnīnum tribūnum plēbis et C. Servīlium praetōrem [mors ac] rei pūblīcae poena remorāta est? At nōs vicēsimum iam diem patimur hebēscere aq̄iem hōrum auctōritātis. Habēmus enim 5 hūiusce modī senātūs cōsultum, vērum inclūsum in tabulīs, tamquam in vāginā reconditum, quō ex senātūs cōsultō cōnfestim tē interfectum esse, Catilina, convenit. Vīvis, et vīvis nōn ad dēpōnendam, sed ad cōfirmādam audāciam.

 Cupiō, patrēs cōscriptī, mē esse clēmentem: cupiō in tan- 10 tīs rei pūblīcae periculis mē nōn dissolūtum vidēri; sed iam mē ipse inertiae nēquitiaeque condemnō.

The Situation Calls for Immediate Action.

5. Castra sunt in Ītaliā contrā populum Rōmānum in tium numerus; eōrum autem castrōrum imperātōrem ducem- 15

 tem. Sī tē iam, Catilina, comprehendī, sī interficī iusserō, crēdō, erit verendum mihi nē nōn hōc potius omnēs bonī sērius ā mē, quam quisquam crūdēlius factum esse dicat. 20

Reasons for the Delay.

 apud Laēcā illā nocte, Catilīna: distribuisti partīs Italiae; statuisti quō quemque proficisci placēret; dēlēgisti quōs Rōmae relinquerēs, quōs tēcum ēdūcerēs; dēscripsisti urbis partīs ad incendia: cōfirmāsti tē ipsum iam esse exitūrum; 15 dixisti paulum tibi esse etiam nunc morae, quod ego vīverem.
 Repertī sunt duo equitēs Rōmānī quī tē istā cūrā liberārent, et sēsē illā ipsā nocte paulō ante lūcem mē in meō lectulō interfectūrōs esse pollicērentur. 10. Haec ego omnia, vixmāiōribus praesidiīs mūnivi atque firmāvi; exclusī eōs quōs tū ad mē salūtātum miserās, cum illī ipsī vēnissent, quōs ego iam multis ac summīs virīs ad mē id temporis ventūrōs esse praedixeram.

Why does not Catiline Leave the City?

V. Quae cum ita sint, Catilīna, perge quō coepisti. 25
 Egredere aliquandō ex urbe: patent portae: proficiscere.
 Nimium diū tē imperātōrem tua illa Mānliāna castra dēsiderant. Edūc tēcum etiam omnis tuos; sī minus, quam plūrimōs: pūrgā urbem. Māgnō mē metū liberābis, dum modo inter mē atque tē mūrus intersit. Nōbiscum versārī iam 30 diūtius nōn potes: nōn feram, nōn patiar, nōn sinam.
 11. Māgna dīs immortalībus habenda est, atque huic ipsi

Jovī Statōrī, antiquissimō custōdī hūius urbīs, grātia, quod hanc tam taetram, tam horribilem tamque infēstam reī pūblicae pestem totiēns iam effūgimus. Nōn est saepius in ūnō homine summa salūs perīclitanda reī pūblicae. Quam
 5 diū mihi cōsuli designātō, Catilina, insidiātus es, nōn pūblicō mē praesidiō, sed privātā diligentīā dēfendi. Cum proximīs comitiīs cōsulāribus mē cōsulem in Campō et competitōrēs tuōs interficere voluisti, compressi cōnātus tuōs nefariōs amicōrum praesidiō et cōpiis, nūllō tumultū
 10 pūblicē concitātō : dēnique, quotiēnscumque mē petisti, per mē tibi obstiti, quamquam vidēbam perniciem meam cum māgnā calamitātē reī pūblicae esse coniūctam. 12. Nunc iam apertē rem pūblicam ūniversam petis : templa deōrum immortalīum, tēcta urbīs, vitam omnium cīvium, Itāliam
 15 [dēnique] tōtam ad exitium ac vāstitatē vocās. Quā rē, quoniam id quod est primum, et quod hūius imperī disciplinaeque māiōrum proprium est, facere nōndum audeō, faciam id quod est ad sevērītātē lēnius, et ad commūnem salūtem ūtilius. ✕ Nam sī tē interficī iusserō, residēbit in rē pūblicā 20 reliqua coniūrātōrum manus. Sīn tū, quod tē iam dūdum hortor, exieris, exhauriētur ex urbe tuōrum comitum māgnā et perniciosā sentina reī pūblicae.

Life There should be Intolerable to him.

13. Quid est, Catilina? num dubitās id mē imperante facere, quod iam tuā sponte faciēbās? Exīre ex urbe iubet 25 cōsul hostem. Interrogās mē, num in exsilium? Nōn iubeō; sed, sī mē cōsulis, suādeō. VI. Quid est enim, Catilina, quod tē iam in hāc urbe dēlectāre possit? in quā nēmō est extrā istam cōiūratiōnem perditōrum hominum qui tē nōn metuat, nēmō qui nōn ōderit. Quae nota domesticae turpitūdinis nōn inūsta vitae tuae est? Quod privātārum rerum dēdecus nōn haeret in fāmā? quae libidō ab oculis, quod facinus a manibus umquam tuis, quod flāgitium ā tōtō corpore-āfuit? Cui tū adulēscēntulō, quem corruptēlārū inlecebris inrētissēs, nōn aut ad audāciam ferrum aut ad libīdinem facem praetulistī? 14. Quid vērō? nūper cum morte superiōris uxōris novīs nūptiis domum vacuēfēcissēs, nōne etiam aliō incrēdibili scelere hōc scelus cumulāstī? 5 quod ego praetermittō et facile patior silērī, nē in hāc civitāte tantī facinoris immānitās aut exstitisse aut nōn vindīcāta esse videātur. Praetermittō ruīnās fortūnārū tuārū, quās omnis impendēre tibi proximīs Idibus sentiēs. Ad illa veniō, quae nōn ad privātam ignōminiam vitiōrū tuō- 10 rum, nōn ad domesticam tuam difficultātem ac turpitūdinem, sed ad summam rem pūblicam atque ad omnium nostrū vitam salūtemque pertinent. 15. Potestne tibi haec lūx, Catilīna, aut hūius caelī spīritus esse iūcundus, cum sciās hōrū esse nēmīnem quī nesciat tē prīdiē Kalendās Iānu- 15 āriās Lepidō et Tullō cōsulibus stetisse in comitiō cum tēlō? manum cōsulū et principum civitātis interficiendōrū causā parāvisse? scelerī ac furōrī tuō nōn mentem aliquam aut timōrem [tuum], sed fortūnam populī Rōmānī obstitisse? Ac iam illa omittō—neque enī sunt aut 20 ōbscūra aut nōn multa commissā—quotiēns tū mē dēsīgnātum, quotiēns cōsulem interficere cōnātus es! quot ego tuās petitiōnēs, ita coniectās ut vitārī posse nōn vidērentur, parvā quādam dēclinātiōne et (ut aiunt) corpore effūgi!

 [Nihil agis,] nihil adsequeris, [nihil mōlīris,] neque tamen 25 cōnārī ac velle dēsistis. 16. Quotiēns tibi iam extorta est ista sīca dē manibus! quotiēns vērō excidit cāsū aliquō et elāpsa est! [Tamen eā carēre diūtius nōn potes,] quae quidem quibus abs tē initiāta sacris ac dēvōta sit nesciō, quod eam necesse putās esse in cōsulis corpore dēfigere. 30

All Good Citizens Fear and Hate him.

VII. Nunc vērō quae tua est ista vita? Sic enim iam tēcū loquar, nōn ut odiō permōtus esse videar, quō dēbeō, sed ut misericordiā, quae tibi nulla dēbētur. Vēnistī paulō ante in senātum. Quis tē ex hāc tantā frequentiā, tot ex tuis amicis, ac necessariis salūtāvit? Si hōc post hominum memoriam contigit nēminī, vōcis expectās contumēliam, cum sis gravissimō iūdiō taciturnitātis oppressus? Quid, quod adventū tuō ista subsellia vacuēfacta sunt? quod omnēs cōsulārēs, quī tibi persaepe ad caedem cōstitutī fuērunt, simul atque adsēdistī, partem istam subselliōrum nūdā atque inānem reliquērunt, quō tandem animō tibi ferendum putās? 17. Servī (meherculē) mei sī mē istō pāctō metuerent, ut tē metuunt omnēs civēs tuī, domum meam relinquendam putārem: tū tibi urbem nōn arbitrāris? et, sī mē meis civibus iniuriā suspectum tam graviter atque offēnsū vidērem, carere mē aspectū civium quam infēstis omnium oculis cōspici māllem. Tū, cum cōscientiā scelerum tuōrum agnōscās odium omnium iustum et iam diū tibi dēbitum, dubitās quōrum mentis, sēnsūsque volnerās, eōrum aspectum praesentiamque vitāre? Si tē parentēs timērent atque ōdissent tuī, neque eōs ullā ratiōne placāre possēs, tū (opinor) ab eōrum oculis aliquō cōncēderēs. Nunc tē patria, quae commūnis est parēs omnium nostrū, ōdit ac metuit, et iam diū tē nihil iūdicat nisi dē parricidiō suō cōgitāre: hūius tū neque auctōritātem verēbere, nec iūdicium sequēre, nec vim pertimēscēs?

His Native City Begs him to be Gone.

18. Quae tēcum, Catilīna, sic agit, et quōdam modō tacita loquitur: 'Nūllum iam aliquot annīs facinus exstitit nisi per tē, nūllum flāgitium sine tē: tibi ūnī multōrum civium necēs, tibi vēxatiō direptiōque sociōrum impūnita fuit ac libera: tū nōn solum ad negligendās lēgēs et quaestiōnēs, vērū etiam ad ēvertendās perfringendāsque valuisti. > Superiōra illa, quamquam ferenda nōn fuērunt, tamen, ut potuī, tulī: nunc vērō mē tōtam esse in metū propter ūnum tē, quicquid increpuerit Catilinam timēri, nūllum vidēri contrā mē cōnsilium inīri posse quod ā tuō scelere abhorreat, nōn est ferendum.

 Quam ob rem discēde, atque hunc mihi timōrem ēripe: sī est vēr^{us}, nē opprimar; sīn falsus, ut tandem aliquandō timēre dēsina^m.’ VIII. 19. Haec sī tēcūm, ut dixī, patria 5 loquātur, nōnne impetrāre dēbeat, etiam sī vim adhibēre nōn possit? Quid, quod tū tē ipse in custōdiam dedisti?
 quod vitandae suspiciōnis causā, ad M’. Lepidum tē habitāre velle dixisti? ā quō nōn receptus etiam ad mē venīre ausus es, atque ut domi meae tē adservārem rogāsti. X Cum ā mē 10 quoque id respōnsum tulissēs, mē nūllō modō posse isdem parietibus tūtō esse tēcūm, quī māgnō in periculō essem quod isdem moenibus continērēmur, ad Q. Metellum praetōrem vēnisti: ā quō repudiātus ad sodālem tuum, virum optimum, M. Mārcellum dēmigrāsti; quem tū videlicet et ad 15 custōdiendum [tē] diligentissimum et ad suspicandum sagā-cissimum et ad vindicāndum fortissimum fore putāsti. Sed quam longē vidētur ā carcere atque ā vinculis abesse dēbere, quī sē ipse iam dīgnum custōdiā iūdicārit? 20. Quae cum ita sint, Catilina, dubitās, sī ēmorī aequō animō nōn potes, 20 abire in aliquās terrās, et vītā istam, multis suppliciiis iūstis dēbitisque ēreptam, fugae solitūdīnique mandāre?

All Good Men Urgent for his Departure.

‘Refer’ inquis ‘ad senātum:’ id enim postulās, et, sī hīc ordō placēre dēcreverit tē ire in exsilium, obtemperātūrum tē esse dicis. ➤ Nōn referam, id quod abhorret ā meis mōri- 25 bus; et tamen faciam ut intellegās quid hī dē tē sentiant.
 Egre^{re} ex urbe, Catilina; libērā rem pūblicā metū; in exsilium, sī hanc vōcem exspectās, proficiscere. Quid est, Catilina? ecquid attendis? ecquid animadvertis hōrum silentium? Patiuntur, tacent. Quid exspectās auctōritā- 30 tem loquentium, quōrum voluntātem tacitōrum perspicis?
 21. At sī hōc idem huic adulēscētī optimō P. Sēstiō, sī fortissimō virō M. Mārcellō dixissem, iam mihi cōsulī, hōc ipsō in templō, senātus iure optimō vim et manūs intulisset.

 Dē tē autem, Catilīna, cum quīescunt, probant: cum patiuntur, dēcernunt: cum tacent, clāmant. Neque hī solum, — 5 quōrum tibi auctōritās est videlicet cāra, vīta vilissima, — sed etiam illi equitēs Rōmānī, honestissimī atque optimī virī, cēterique fortissimī civēs, quī circumstant senātum, quōrum tū et frequentiam vidēre et studia perspicere et vōcēs paulō ante exaudire potuisti. Quōrum ego vix abs tē iam diū 10 manūs ac tēla contineō, eōsdem facile addūcam, ut tē haec, quae vāstāre iam pridem studēs, relinquentem usque ad portās prōsequantur.

The Consul Entreats him to Go.

IX. 22. Quamquam quid loquor? Tē ut ūlla rēs frangat?
 tū ut umquam tē corrigās? tū ut ūllam fugam meditēre? tū 15 ut exsilium cōgitēs? Utinam tibi istam mentem di immor-tālēs dūint! tametsi videō, si meā vōce perterritus ire in exsilium animum indūxeris, quanta tempestās invidiae nōbis — si minus in praesēns tempus, recentī memoriā scelerum tuōrum, at in posteritatem — impendeat: sed est tanti, dum 20 modo ista sit privāta calamitās, et ā rei pūblicae periculīs sēiungātur. Sed tū ut vitīis tuis commoveāre, ut lēgum poenās pertimēscās, ut temporibus rei pūblicae cēdās, nōn est postulandum. Neque enim is es, Catilīna, ut tē aut pudor umquam ā turpitūdine aut metus ā periculō aut ratiō 25 ā furōre revocārit. 23. Quam ob rem, ut saepe iam dixi, proficiscere; ac, si mihi inimicō (ut praedicās) tuō cōnflāre vīs invidiam, rēctā perge in exsilium: vix feram sermōnēs hominum si id fēceris; vix mōlem istius invidiae, si in exsilium iūssū cōsulis ieris, sustinēbō. Sīn autem servīre 30 meae laudī et glōriae māvīs, ēgredere cum importūnā scele-rātōrum manū: cōnfer tē ad Mānlium, concitā perditōs civīs, sēcerne tē ā bonīs, infer patriae bellum, exsultā impiō latrōciniō, ut ā mē nōn ēiectus ad aliēnōs, sed invitātus ad tuōs isse videāris.

But he will Go Out only as a Declared Enemy.

24. Quamquam quid ego tē invitem, ā quō iam sciam esse praemissōs qui tibi ad Forum Aurēlium praestōlārentur armātī? cui sciam pāctam et cōstitūtam cum Mānliō diem? 5 ā quō etiam aquilam illam argenteam quam tibi ac tuis omnibus cōfidō perniciosam ac fūnestam futūram, cui domi tuae sacrārium scelerum tuōrum cōstitutum fuit, sciam esse praemissam? Tū ut illā carere diūtius possis, quam venerārī ad caedem proficiscēns solēbas, ā cūius altāribus 10 saepe istam impiam dexteram ad necem civium trānstulisti?

X. 25. Ibis tandem aliquandō, quō tē iam pridem ista tua cupiditās effrēnāta ac furiōsa rapiēbat. Neque enim tibi haec rēs adfert dolōrem, sed quandam incrēdibilem voluptātem. Ad hanc tē āmentiam nātūra peperit, voluntās exer- 15 cuit, fortūna servāvit. Numquam tū nōn modo ōtium, sed nē bellum quidem nisi nefārium concupisti. Nanctus es ex perditis atque ab omni nōn modo fortūnā vērū etiam spē dērelictis cōflātā improbōrum manum. 26. Hic tū quā laetitiā perfruere! quibus gaudiis exsultābis! quantā in 20 voluptāte bacchābere, cum in tantō numerō tuōrum neque audiēs virum bonum quemquam neque vidēbis! Ad hūius vītae studium meditātī illi sunt qui feruntur labōrēs tuī, — iacere humī nōn solum ad obsidendum stuprum, vērū etiam ad facinus obeundum: vigilāre nōn solum insidiantem somnō 25 maritōrum, vērū etiam bonis ōtiōsōrum. Habēs ubi ostentēs tuam illam praeclēram patientiam famis, frigoris, inopiae rerum omnium, quibus tē brevī tempore cōfectum esse sentiēs. 27. Tantum profēcī tum, cum tē ā cōsulātū repulī, ut exsul potius temptāre quam cōsul vēxāre rem pūbli- 30 cam possēs, atque ut id quod est ā tē scelerātē susceptum, latrōcinium potius quam bellum nōminārētur.

The Consul may be Charged with Remissness.

XI. Nunc, ut ā mē, patrēs cōscripti, quandam prope iūstam patriae querimōniam dētester ac dēprecer, percipite, quaesō, diligenter quae dīcam, et ea penitus animis vestris mentibusque mandāte. Etenim sī mēcum patria, quae mihi 5 vītā meā multō est cārīor, sī cūncta Ītalia, sī omnis rēs pūblica, loquātur: 'M. Tullī, quid agis? Tūne eum, quem esse hostem comperisti, quem ducem bellī futūrum vidēs, quem exspectārī imperātōrem in castrīs hostium sentīs, auctōrem sceleris, principem coniūrātiōnis, ēvocātōrem servō-
 10 rum et cīvium perditōrum, exīre patiēre, ut abs tē nōn ēmissus ex urbe, sed immissus in urbem esse videātur? Nōn hunc in vincula dūcī, nōn ad mortem rapī, nōn summō suppliciō mactārī imperābis? 28. Quid tandem tē impedit? Mōsne māiōrum? At persaepe etiam privātī in hāc rē
 15 pūblicā perniciosōs cīvīs morte multāvērunt. An lēgēs, quae dē cīvium Rōmānōrum suppliciō rogātae sunt? At numquam in hāc urbe quī ā rē pūblicā dēfēcērunt cīvium iūra tenuērunt. An invidiam posteritātis timēs? Praeclāram vērō populō Rōmānō refers grātiā, quī tē hominem
 20 per tē cōgnitum, nullā commendātiōne māiōrum, tam mātūrē ad summum imperium per omnis honōrum gradūs extulit, sī propter invidiae aut alicūius periculī metum salutem cīvium tuōrum negligis. 29. Sed sī quis est invidiae metus, num est vehementius sevērītātis ac fortitudinis invidia quam
 25 inertiae ac nēquitiae pertimēscenda? An cum bellō vāstābitur Ītalia, vēxābuntur urbēs, tēcta ārdēbunt, tum tē nōn existimās invidiae incendiō cōnflagrātūrum?'

But he has been Biding his Time.

XII. His ego sānctissimīs rēi pūblīcae vōcibus, et eōrum hominum quī hōc idem sentiunt mentibus, pauca respon-30 dēbō. Ego, sī hōc optimum factū iūdicārem, patrēs cōscripti, Catilinā morte multārī, ūnīus ūsūram hōrae gladiā-tōrī istī ad vivendum nōn dedissem. Etenim sī summī et clārissimī virī Sātūrninī et Gracchōrum et Flacci et superiōrum complūrium sanguine nōn modo sē nōn contāminārunt, sed etiam honestārunt, certē verendum mihi nōn erat nē quid hōc parricidā cīvium interfectō invidiae mihi in posteritatem redundāret. Quod sī ea mihi māximē impendēret, tamen hōc animō fui sēmp̄r, ut invidiam virtūte partam glōriam, nōn invidiam putārem. 30. Quamquam nōn nūlli sunt in hōc ōrdine, quī aut ea quae imminent nōn videant, aut ea quae vident dissimulent: quī spem Catilinae mollibus 10 sentiētiis aluērunt, coniūrātiōnemque nāscentem nōn crēdendō corrōborāvērunt: quōrum auctōritatem secūtī multi nōn solum improbī, vērū etiam imperitī, sī in hunc animadvertissem, crūdēliter et rēgiē factum esse dicerent. Nunc intellegō, sī iste, quō intendit, in Mānliāna castra 15 pervēnerit, nēminem tam stultum fore quī nōn videat coniūrātiōnem esse factam, nēminem tam improbum quī nōn fateātur. Hōc autem ūnō interfectō, intellegō hanc rei pūblicae pestem paulisper reprimī, nōn in perpetuum comprimī posse. Quod sī sē eiēc̄erit, sēcūmque suōs ēdūxerit, 20 et eōdem cēterōs undique conlēc̄tōs naufragōs adgregārit, exstinguētur atque dēlēbitur nōn modo haec tam adulta rei pūblicae pestis, vērū etiam stirps āc sēmen malōrum omnium.

For Half-way Measures would have been of No Avail.

XIII. 31. Etenim iam diū, patrēs cōnscriptī, in his periculis coniūrātiōnis insidiisque versāmur, sed nesciō quō pāctō omnium scelerum āc veteris furōris et audāciae mātūrītās in nostrī cōsulātūs tempus ērūpit. Quod sī ex tantō latrōciniō iste ūnus tollētur, vidēbimur fortasse ad breve quoddam tempus cūrā et metū esse relevātī; periculum 30 autem residēbit, et erit inclūsum penitus in vēnis atque in visceribus rei pūblicae. Ut saepe hominēs aegrī morbō gravī, cum aestū febrīque iactantur, sī aquam gelidam bibe-rint, primō relevārī videntur, deinde multō gravius vehementiusque affligantur; sic hīc morbus, quī est in rē publicā, domī suae cōsulī, circumstāre tribūnal praetōris urbānī, obsidēre cum gladiīs cūriam, malleolōs et facēs ad inflam-10 mandam urbem comparāre: sit dēnique īscriptum in fronte ūnius cūiusque quid dē rē publicā sentiat. Polliceor hōc vōbīs, patrēs cōscriptī, tantam in nōbīs cōsulibus fore diligentiam, tantam in vōbīs auctōritātem, tantam in equitibus Rōmānīs virtūtem, tantam in omnibus bonīs cōsēnsiō-15 nem, ut Catilinae profectiōne omnia patefacta, inlūstrāta, oppressa, vindicāta esse videātis.

Appeal to Jupiter to Save Rome.

33. Hisce ōminibus, Catilina, cum summā rei pūblicae salūte, cum tuā peste ac perniciē, cumque eōrum exitiō quī sē tēcum omnī scelere parricidiōque iūnxērunt, proficiscere ad impium bellum ac nefārium. Tū, Iuppiter, quī isdem quibus haec urbs auspicīs [ā Rōmulō] es cōstitutus, quem Statōrem hūius urbis atque imperī vērē nōmināmus, hunc et hūius sociōs ā tuis cēterisque templis, ā tēctis urbis ac moenibus, ā vitā fortūnisque cīvium [omnium] arcēbis, et hominēs bonōrum inimicōs, hostis patriae, latrōnēs Ītalīae, scelerum foedere inter sē ac nefāriā societāte coniūctōs, aeternis suppliciis vivōs mortuōsque mactābis.

II. CHARACTER OF THE CONSPIRACY.

(In L. Catilinam Ōrātiō II.)

BEFORE THE PEOPLE, NOV. 8.

WHEN Cicero had finished his speech and taken his seat, Catiline attempted to reply, but was interrupted by the cries and reproaches of the Senators. With a few threatening words, he rushed from the temple, and left the city the same night, for the camp of Manlius. The next morning the consul assembled the people, and announced to them the news, in the triumphant speech which follows.

Catiline is Gone.

TANDEM aliquandō, Quiritēs, L. Catilinam, furem audaciā, scelus anhelantem, pestem patriae nefariē molientem, vōbis atque huic urbī ferrō flammāque minitantem, ex urbe vel eiēcimus vel emisimus, vel ipsum egredientem verbis prōsecuti sumus. Abiit, excessit, evāsīt, erūpit. Nulla iam perniciēs ā mōstrō illō atque prōdigio moenibus ipsis intrā moenia comparābitur. Atque hunc quidem ūnum hūius bellī domesticī ducem sine contrōversiā vīcimus. Nōn enim iam inter latera nōstra sīca illa versābitur: nōn in campō, nōn in forō, nōn in cūrīā, nōn dēnique

 5 intrā domesticōs parietēs pertimēscēmus. Locō ille mōtus est, cum est ex urbe dēpulsus. Palam iam cum hoste nūllō impediēte bellum [iūstum] gerēmus. Sine dubiō perdidimus hominem māgnificēque vīcimus, cum illum ex occultis insidiis in apertum latrōcinium coniēcimus. 2. Quod vērō
 10 nōn cruentum mucrōnem (ut voluit) extulit, quod vivīs nōbis ēgressus est, quod eī ferrum ē manibus extorsimus, quod incolumis cīvīs, quod stantem urbem reliquit, quantō tandem illum maerōre esse adflictum et prōfligātum putātis? Iacet ille nunc prōstrātusque est, et sē perculsum atque abiec-15 tum esse sentit, et retorquet oculōs profectō saepe ad hanc urbem, quam ē suis faucibus ēreptam esse lūget: quae quidem mihi laetārī vidētur, quod tantam pestem ēvomuerit forāsque prōiēcirit.

He Ought to have been Put to Death.

II. 3. Āc sī quis est tālis, quālis esse omnīs oportēbat, 20 quī in hōc ipsō, in quō exsultat et triumphat ōrātiō mea, mē vehementer accūset, quod tam capitālem hostem nōn comprehenderim potius quam ēmiserim, nōn est ista mea culpa, sed temporum. Interfectum esse L. Catilinam et gravissimō suppliciō adfectum iam pridem oportēbat, idque ā mē
 25 et mōs māiōrum et hūius imperī sevērītās et rēs pūblica postulābat. Sed quam multōs fuisse putātis quī quae ego dēferrem nōn crēderent? [quam multōs quī propter stultitiam nōn putārent?] quam multōs quī etiam dēfenderent? [quam multōs quī propter improbitātem favērent?] Āc sī 30 illō sublātō dēpellī ā vōbis omne periculum iudicārem, iam pridem ego L. Catilinam nōn modo invidiae meae, vērū etiam vītae periculō sustulissem.

But the Time was not Ripe.

4. Sed cum vidērem, nē vōbīs quidem omnibus rē etiam tum probatā, sī illum, ut erat meritus, morte multāssem, fore ut ēius sociōs invidiā oppressus persequī nōn possem, rem hūc dēdūxī, ut tum palam pūgnāre possētis, cum hostem apertē vidērētis. Quem quidem ego hostem quam vehe- 5 menter foris esse timendum putem, licet hinc intellegātis, quod etiam molestē ferō, quod ex urbe parum comitātus exierit. Utinam ille omnīs sēcūm suās cōpiās ēdūxisset!
Tongilium mihi ēdūxit, quem amāre in praetextā coeperat, Pūblicium et Minucium, quōrum aes aliēnum contrāctum in 10
popinā nūllum rei pūblicae mōtum adferre poterat: reliquit quōs virōs! quantō aere aliēnō! quam valentis! quam nōbilis!

His Worthless Partisans Remain, but are Powerless.

III. 5. Itaque ego illum exercitum prae Gallicānis legiōnibus, et hōc dilēctū quem in agrō Picēnō et Gallicō Q. 15 Metellus habuit, et his cōpiis quae ā nōbīs cotidiē com-parantur, māgnō opere contemnō, conlētum ex senibus dēspērātis, ex agrestī lūxuriā, ex rūsticis dēcoctōribus, ex eīs quī vadimōnia dēserere quam illum exercitum māluērunt: quibus ego nōn modo sī aciem exercitūs nostrī, 20 vērū etiam sī ēdictum praetōris ostenderō, concident.
Hōs, quōs videō volitāre in forō, quōs stāre ad cūriam, quōs etiam in senātum venīre, quī nitent unguentis, quī fulgent purpurā, māllem sēcūm militēs ēdūxisset: quī sī hic permanent, mementōte nōn tam exercitum illum esse 25 nōbīs quam hōs, quī exercitum dēseruērunt, pertimēscendōs.
Atque hōc etiam sunt timendī magis, quod quicquid cōgitant mē scīre sentiunt, neque tamen permoventur. 6. Videō cui sit Apūlia attribūta, quis habeat Etrūriam, quis agrum Picēnum, quis Gallicum, quis sibi hās urbānās insidiās caedis 30 atque incendiōrum dēpoposcerit: omnia superiōris noctis cōnsilia ad mē perlāta esse sentiunt: patefēcī in senātū hesternō diē: Catilīna ipse pertimuit, profūgit: hī quid exspectant? Nē illī vehementer errant, sī illam meam pristinam lēnitātem perpetuam spērant futūrā.

Let them Follow him.

5 IV. Quod exspectāvī, iam sum adsecūtus, ut vōs omnēs factam esse apertē coniūratiōnem contrā rem publicā vidērētis: nisi vērō sī quis est quī Catilīnae similis cum Catilinā sentire nōn putet. Nōn est iam lēnitātī locus: sevērītātem rēs ipsa flāgitat. Ūnum etiam nunc concēdam: exeant, 10 proficiscantur; nē patiantur dēsideriō suī Catilinā miserum tābescere. Dēmōnstrābō iter: Aurēliā viā profectus est: sī adcelerāre volent, ad vesperam cōsequentur.

He was the Ringleader of all Scoundrels and Profligates.

7. Ō fortunātā rem publicā, sī quidem hanc sentinā urbis ēiēcerit! Ūnō (meherculē) Catilinā exhaustō, levāta
15 mihi et recreāta rēs publicā vidētur. Quid enim malī aut sceleris fingī aut cōgitārī potest quod nōn ille concēperit? Quis tōtā Italiā venēficus, quis gladiātor, quis latrō, quis sicārius, quis parricida, quis testāmentōrum sūbiector, quis circumscrip̄tor, quis gāneō, quis nepōs, quis adulter, quae 20 mulier infāmis, quis corruptor iuventūtis, quis corruptus, quis perditus invenīrī potest, quī sē cum Catilinā nōn familiārissimē vixisse fateātur? quae caedēs per hōsce annōs sine illō facta est? quod nefārium stuprum nōn per illum?

8. Iam vērō quae tanta umquam in ūllō homine iuventūtis 25 inlecebra fuit, quanta in illō? quī aliōs ipse amābat turpissimē, aliōrum amōrī flāgitiōsissimē serviēbat: aliīs fructum libidinum, aliīs mortem parentum nōn modo impellendō, vērū etiam adiuvandō pollicēbātur. Nunc vērō quam subitō nōn solum ex urbe, vērū etiam ex agris ingentem 30 numerum perditōrum hominum conlēgerat! Nēmō nōn modo Rōmae, sed nē ūllō quidem in angulō tōtius Ītalīae oppressus aere aliēnō fuit, quem nōn ad hōc incrēdibile sceleris foedus ascīverit.

V. 9. Atque ut ēius diversa studia in dissimilī ratiōne perspicere possitis, nēmō est in lūdō gladiātōriō paulō ad 5 facinus audācior, quī sē nōn intimum Catilīnae esse fateātur; nēmō in scaenā levior et nēquior, quī sē nōn ēiusdem prope sodālem fuisse commemoret. Atque idem tamen, stuprōrum et scelerum exercitātiōne adsuēfactus, frigore et famē et siti et vigiliis perferendis, fortis ab istis praedicābā- 10 tur, cum industriae subsidia atque instrūmenta virtūtis in libidine audāciāque cōnsūmeret.

Let his Associates Depart or Take the Consequences.

10. Hunc vērō sī secūtī erunt suī comitēs, sī ex urbe exierint dēspērātōrum hominum flāgitiōsī gregēs, Ō nōs beātōs! Ō rem pūblicam fortūnātam! Ō praeclāram lau- 15 dem cōsulātūs mei! Nōn enim iam sunt mediocrēs hominum libidinēs, nōn hūmānae ac tolerandae audāciae: nihil cōgitant nisi caedem, nisi incendia, nisi rapīnās. Patri-mōnia sua profūdērunt, fortūnās suās obligāvērunt: rēs eōs iam prīdem, fidēs nūper dēficere coepit: eadem tamen illa, 20 quae erat in abundantīā, libidō permanet. Quod sī in vinō et aleā cōmissātiōnēs solum et scorta quaererent, essent illī quidem dēspērandī, sed tamen essent ferendī: hōc vērō quis ferre possit, inertīs hominēs fortissimīs virīs insidiārī, stultissimōs prūdētissimīs, ēbriōsōs sobriīs, dormientīs vigilantī- 25 bus? quī mihi accubantēs in convīviīs, complexī mulierēs impudicās, vinō languidī, cōnfertī cibō, sertīs redimitī, unguentīs oblitī, dēbilitātī stuprīs, ēructant sermōnibus suis caedem bonōrum atque urbis incendia. 11. Quibus ego cōfidō impendēre fātum aliquod, et poenam iam diū impro- 30 bitātī, nēquitiae, scelerī, libidini dēbitam aut instāre iam plānē, aut certē appropinquāre. Quōs sī meus cōsulātus,

In exsilium ēiciēbam, quem iam 5 ingressum esse in bellum vidēbam? Etenim, crēdō, Mānlius iste centuriō, quī in agrō Faesulānō castra posuit, bellum populō Rōmānō suō nōmine indixit, et illa castra nunc nōn Catilinam ducem exspectant, et ille ēiectus in exsilium sē Massiliam, ut āiunt, nōn in haec castra cōferet. 10

Men Say the Consul has Driven him into Exile: Would the Charge were True!

VII. Ō condiціōnem miseram nōn modo administrandae, vērū etiam cōservandae rei pūblīcae! Nunc sī L. Catilīna cōnsiliis, labōribus, periculis meis circumclūsus ac dēbilitātus subitō pertimuerit, sententiam mūtāverit, dēseruerit suos, cōnsilium bellī faciendī abiēcerit, ex hōc cursū sceleris 15 ac bellī iter ad fugam atque in exsilium converterit, — nōn ille ā mē spoliātus armīs audāciae, nōn obstupefactus ac perterritus meā diligentīā, nōn dē spē cōnātūque dēpulsus, sed indemnātus, innocēns, in exsilium ēiectus ā cōnsule vī et minīs esse dicētur; et erunt quī illum, sī hōc fēcerit, nōn 20 improbum, sed miserum, mē nōn diligentissimum cōnsulem, sed crūdēlissimum tyrannum existimārī velint! 15. Est mihi tantī, Quiritēs, hūius invidiae falsae atque iniquae tempestātem subire, dum modo ā vōbīs hūius horribilis bellī ac nefārii periculum dēpellātur. Dicātur sānē ēiectus esse 25 ā mē, dum modo eat in exsilium. Sed, mihi crēdite, nōn est itūrus. Numquam ego ā dīs immortalibus optābō, Quiritēs, invidiae meae levandae causā, ut L. Catilinam dūcere exercitum hostium atque in armīs volitāre audiātis: sed trīduō tamen audiētis: multōque magis illud timeō, nē mihi 30 sit invidiōsum aliquandō, quod illum ēmiserim potius quam quod ēiēcērim. Sed cum sint hominēs quī illum, cum profectus sit, ēiectum esse dīcant, eidem sī interfectus esset quid dicerent? 16. Quamquam istī, quī Catilinam Massiliam ire dictitant, nōn tam hōc queruntur quam verentur. 5 Nēmō est istōrum tam misericors, qui illum nōn ad Māniliū quam ad Massiliēnsis ire mālīt. Ille autem, sī (meherculē) hōc quod agit numquam antea cōgitāset, tamen latrōcinantem sē interficī māllet quam exsulem vivere. Nunc vērō, cum ei nihil adhūc praeter ipsius voluntātem cōgitātiōnemque acciderit, nisi quod vivīs nōbīs Rōmā profectus est, optēmus potius ut eat in exsilium quam querāmur. 10

Character of his Partisans.

VIII. 17. Sed cūr tam diū dē ūnō hoste loquimur, et dē hoste quī iam fatētur sē esse hostem, et quem, quia (quod semper volui) mūrus interest, nōn timeō: dē eis quī dissimulant, quī Rōmae remanent, quī nōbīscum sunt, nihil dīcimus? Quōs quidem ego, sī ūllō modō fieri possit, nōn tam ulciscī studeō quam sārāre sibi ipsōs, plācāre rei pūblicae, neque id quā rē fieri nōn possit, sī mē audire volent, intellegō. Expōnam enim vōbīs, Quiritēs, ex quibus generibus 15 hominum istae cōpiae comparentur: deinde singulis medicinam cōsili atque ōrātiōnis meae, sī quam poterō, adferam. 20

First: Rich Men in Debt.

18. Ūnum genus est eōrum, quī māgnō in aere aliēnō māiōrēs etiam possēsiōnēs habent, quārum amorē adductī dissolvī nūllō modō possunt. Hōrum hominum speciēs est 25 honestissima — sunt enim locuplētēs: voluntās vērō et causa impudentissima.] Tū agrīs, tū aedificiīs, tū argentō, tū familiā, tū rēbus omnibus ōrnātus et cōpiōsus sis, et dubitēs dē possēsiōne dētrahere, adquirere ad fidem? Quid enim exspectās? bellum? Quid ergō? in vāstātiōne omnium, 30 tuās possēsiōnēs sacrōsānctās futūrās putās? An tabulās novās? Errant qui istās ā Catilinā exspectant: meō beneficiō tabulae novae prōferentur, vērū auctiōnāriae. Neque enim isti, quī possessiōnēs habent, aliā ratiōne ūllā salvī esse possunt. Quod sī mātūrius facere voluissent, neque — id quod stultissimum est — certāre cum ūsūris frūctibus prae- 5 diōrum, et locuplētioribus hīs et meliōribus civibus ūterēmur. Sed hōsce hominēs minimē putō pertimēscendōs, quod aut dēdūci dē sentiētiā possunt, aut, sī permanēbunt, magis mihi videntur vōta factūrī contrā rem publicā quam arma lātūrī.

Second: Men Eager for Power and Wealth.

IX. 19. Alterum genus est eōrum quī, quamquam premuntur aere aliēnō, dominātiōnem tamen exspectant, rērum potiri volunt, honōrēs, quōs quiētā rē publicā dēspērānt, perturbātā sē cōsequi posse arbitrantur. Quibus hōc praecipiendum vidētur, — ūnum scilicet et idem quod reli- 15 quis omnibus, — ut dēspērent id quod cōnantur sē cōsequi posse: primum omnium mē ipsum vigilāre, adesse, prōvidēre rei publicae; deinde māgnōs animōs esse in bonis virīs, māgnam concordiam in māximā multitudine, māgnās praetereā cōpiās militum; deōs dēnique immortālis huic 20 invictō populō, clārissimō imperiō, pulcherrimae urbi, contrā tantam vim sceleris praesentis auxilium esse lātūrōs. Quod sī iam sint id, quod cum summō furōre cupiunt, adepti, num illi in cinere urbis et in sanguine civium, quae mente cōnscelerātā ac nefariā concupivērunt, sē cōsulēs ac 25 dictātōrēs aut etiam rēgēs spērānt futūrōs? Nōn vident id sē cupere, quod sī adepti sint, fugitivō alicui aut gladiātōri concēdi sit necesse?

Third: Old Soldiers of Sulla.

20. Tertium genus est aetāte iam adfectum, sed tamen exercitātiōne rōbustum; quō ex genere iste est Mānlius, 30 cui nunc Catilina succēdit. Sunt hominēs ex eīs colōniis quās Sulla cōstituit: quās ego ūniversās civium esse optimōrum et fortissimōrum virōrum sentiō; sed tamen eī sunt colōnī, quī sē in inspērātis ac repentinis pecūniis sūmptuōsius insolentiusque iactārent. Hī dum aedificant tamquam

 5 beātī, dum praediis lēctis, familiis māgnis, conviviis apparātis dēlectantur, in tantum aes aliēnum incidērunt, ut, sī salvī esse velint, Sulla sit [eis] ab inferis excitandus: quī etiam nōn nullōs agrestis, hominēs tenuis atque egentis, in eandem illam spem rapinārum veterum impulērunt. Quōs
 10 ego utrōsque in eōdem genere praedātōrum direptōrumque pōnō. Sed eōs hōc moneō: dēsinant furere ac prōscriptiōnēs et dictātūrās cōgitāre. Tantus enim illōrum temporum dolor inūstus est civitātī, ut iam ista nōn modo hominēs, sed nē pecudēs quidem mihi passūrae esse videantur.

Fourth: Ruined Debtors.

15 X. 21. Quartum genus est sānē varium et mixtum et turbulentum, quī iam pridem premuntur, quī numquam ēmergunt, quī partim inertīā, partim male gerendō negōtiō, partim etiam sūmptibus in vetere aere aliēnō vacillant; quī vadi-mōniis, iūdiiciis, prōscriptiōne bonōrum dēfatigātī, permulti
 20 et ex urbe et ex agris sē in illa castra cōferre dīcuntur. Hōsce ego nōn tam militēs acris quam infitiātōrēs lentōs esse arbitror. Quī hominēs primum, sī stāre nōn possunt, conruant; sed ita, ut nōn modo civitās, sed nē vicinī quidem proximī sentiant. Nam illud nōn intellegō, quam ob rem, 25 sī vivere honestē nōn possunt, perire turpiter velint; aut cūr minōre dolōre peritūrōs sē cum multis, quam sī sōlī pereant, arbitrentur.

Fifth and Sixth: Cut-throats and Debauchees.

22. Quintum genus est parricidārum, sicāriōrum, dēnique omnium facinorōsōrum: quōs ego ā Catilinā nōn revocō;
 30 nam neque ab eō divelli possunt, et pereant sānē in latrō-ciniō, quoniam sunt ita multī ut eōs carcer capere nōn possit. Postrēmum autem genus est nōn solum numerō, vērū etiam genere ipsō atque vitā, quod proprium Catilinae est, — dē ēius dilēctū, immō vērō dē complexū ēius ac sinū ; quōs pexō capillō, nitidōs, aut imberbīs aut bene barbātōs vidētis, 5 manicātis et tālāribus tunicis, vēlis amictōs nōn togis, quōrum omnis industria vitae et vigilandī labor in antelūcānis cēnis exprōmitur. [23. In hīs gregibus omnēs aleātōrēs, omnēs adulterī, omnēs impūrī impudicīque versantur. Hī pueri tam lepidi ac dēlicāti nōn solum amāre et amārī, neque 10 saltāre et cantāre, sed etiam sicās vibrāre et spargere venēna didicērunt ; quī nisi exeunt, nisi pereunt, etiam si Catilina perierit, scītōte hōc in rē publicā sēminārium Catilinārum futūrum. Vērū tamen quid sibi istī miserī volunt ? Num suās sēcum mulierculās sunt in castra ductūrī ? Quem ad 15 modum autem illis carēre poterunt, hīs praesertim iam noctibus ? Quō autem pāctō illi Apennīnum atque illās pruīnās ac nivīs perferent ? nisi idcirco sē facilius hiemem tolerātūrōs putant, quod nūdī in conviviis saltāre didicērunt.

These Followers of Catiline Contrasted with the Defenders of the State.

XI. 24. Ō bellum māgnō opere pertimēscendum, cum 20 hanc sit habitūrus Catilina sçortōrum cohortem praetōriam ! Instruite nunc, Quirītēs, contrā hās tam praeclārās Catilinae cōpiās vestra praesidia vestrōsque exercitūs. Et primum gladiātōrī illi cōfectō et sauciō cōsulēs imperātōrēsque vestrōs oppōnite ; deinde contrā illam naufragōrum ēiectam 25 ac dēbilitātam manum flōrem tōtius Italiae ac rōbur ēducite. Iam vērō urbēs colōniārum ac mūnicipiōrum respondēbunt Catilinae tumulis silvestribus. Neque ego cēterās cōpiās, ōrnāmenta, praesidia vestra cum illius latrōnis inopiā atque egestāte cōferre dēbeō. 25. Sed si, omissis hīs rēbus, 30 quibus nōs suppeditāmur, eget ille, — senātū, equitibus Rōmānis, urbe, aerārīō, vectigālibus, cūntā Italiā, prōvinciis omnibus, exteris natiōibus, — si, his rebus omissis, causas ipsas quae inter se cōfligunt contendere velimus, ex eo ipsō quam valdē illi iaceant intellegere possumus. Ex hāc enim parte pudor pūgnat, illinc petulantia; hinc pudicitia, illinc 5 stuprum; hinc fidēs, illinc fraudātiō; hinc pietās, illinc scelus; hinc cōstantia, illinc furor; hinc honestās, illinc turpitūdō; hinc continentia, illinc libidō; dēnique aequitās, temperantia, fortitūdō, prūdentia, [virtūtēs omnēs,] certant cum inīquitāte, lūxuriā, ignāviā, temeritāte [cum vitiis omni-10 bus]; postrēmō cōpia cum egestāte, bona ratiō cum perditā, mēns sāna cum āmentīā, bona dēnique spēs cum omnium rerum dēspērātiōne cōfligit. In eius modi certāmine ac proeliō, nōnne, etiam si hominum studia dēficient, di ipsi immortalēs cōgant ab his praeclārissimis virtūtibus tot et 15 tanta vitia superārī? ¶

Citizens Need not Fear: the Consul will Protect the City.

XII. 26. Quae cum ita sint, Quiritēs, vōs, quem ad modum iam antea, vestra tēcta custōdiis vigiliisque dēfendite: mihi, ut urbī sine vestrō mōtū ac sine ullō tumultū satis esset praesidi, cōsultum atque prōvisum est. Colōnī 20 omnēs mūnicipēsque vestri, certiōrēs ā mē facti dē hāc nocturnā excursiōne Catilinae, facile urbis suās finisque dēfendent. Gladiātōrēs, quam sibi ille manum certissimam fore putāvit, — quamquam animō meliōre sunt quam pars patriciōrum, — potestāte tamen nostrā continēbuntur. Q.
 25 Metellus, quem ego hōc prōspiciēs in agrum Gallicum Picēnumque praemisi, aut opprimet hominem, aut omnis eius mōtūs cōnātūsque prohibēbit. Reliquis autem dē rebus cōstituendis, mātūrandis, agendis, iam ad senātum referēmus, quem vocārī vidētis.

The Conspirators Warned.

30 27. Nunc illōs quī in urbe remānsērunt, atque adeō qui contrā urbis salūtem omniumque vestrū in urbe ā Catilinā relictī sunt, quamquam sunt hostēs, tamen, quia sunt cīvēs, monitōs etiam atque etiam volō. Mea lēnitās sī cui adhūc solūtior vīsa est, hōc exspectāvit, ut id quod latēbat ērumperet. Quod reliquum est, iam nōn possum obliviscī meam hanc esse patriam, mē hōrum esse cōnsulem, mihi aut cum his vivendum aut prō his esse moriendum. Nūllus est portis custōs, nūllus insidiātor viae: sī quī exīre volunt, cōnivēre possum. Quī vērō sē in urbe commōverit, cūius ego nōn modo factum, sed inceptum ūllum cōnātumve contrā patriam dēprehenderō, sentiet in hāc urbe esse cōsulēs vigilantīs, esse ēgregiōs magistrātūs, esse fortem senātum, esse arma, esse carcerem, quem vindicem nefāriōrum ac manifestōrum scelerum māiōrēs nostrī esse voluērunt.

There shall be No Disturbance.

XIII. 28. Atque haec omnia sic agentur, Quiritēs, ut māximae rēs minimō mōtū, pericula summa nūllō tumultū, bellum intestinum ac domesticum post hominum memoriam crūdēlissimum et māximum, mē ūnō togātō duce et imperātōre sedētur. Quod ego sic administrābō, Quiritēs, ut, sī ūllō modō fieri poterit, nē improbus quidem quisquam in hāc urbe poenam suī sceleris sufferat. Sed sī vis manifestae audāciae, sī impendēns patriae periculum mē necessariō dē hāc animī lēnitāte dēdūxerit, illud profectō perficiam, quod in tantō et tam insidiōsō bellō vix optandum vidētur, ut neque bonus quisquam intereat, paucōrumque poenā vōs omnēs salvī esse possitis.

The People may Trust in the Immortal Gods.

29. Quae quidem ego neque meā prūdentiā neque hūmānis cōsiliis frētus polliceor vōbīs, Quiritēs, sed multis et nōn dubiis deōrum immortalīum significātiōnibus, quibus ego ducibus in hanc spem sententiamque sum ingressus; quī iam nōn procul, ut quondam solēbant, ab externō hoste atque longinquō, sed hīc praesentēs suō nūmine atque auxiliō sua templa atque urbis tēcta dēfendunt. Quōs vōs, Quiritēs, precārī, venerārī, implōrāre dēbētis, ut, quam urbem pulcherrimam flōrentissimamque esse voluērunt, hanc, omnibus 5 hostium cōpiis terrā marique superātis, ā perditissimōrum cīvium nefariō scelere dēfendant.

III. HOW THE CONSPIRACY WAS SUPPRESSED.

(In L. Catilinam Ōrātiō III.)

BEFORE THE PEOPLE, DEC. 3.

Now that Catiline had been driven into open war, the conspiracy within the city was in the hands of utterly incompetent men. Lentulus, who claimed the lead by virtue of his consular rank, was vain, pompous, and inefficient. The next in rank, Cethegus, was energetic enough, but rash and bloodthirsty. The consul easily kept the run of events, and at last succeeded in getting the conspirators to commit themselves in writing, when he had no difficulty in arresting them and securing the documents. How this was accomplished is told in the third oration.

The Citizens Congratulated on their Deliverance.

REM PŪBLICAM, Quiritēs, vitamque omnium vestrū, bona, fortūnās, coniugēs liberōsque vestrōs, atque hōc 10 domicilium clārissimī imperī, fortūnatissimam pulcherrimamque urbem, hodiernō diē deōrum immortalium summō ergā vōs amōre, labōribus, cōsiliis, periculīs meis, ē flammā atque ferrō āc paene ex faucibus fātī ēreptam et vōbis cōservātam āc restitūtam vidētis. 2. Et sī nōn minus nōbis iūcundi atque inlūstrēs sunt eī diēs quibus cōservāmur, 15 quam illi quibus nāscimur, — quod salūtis certa laetitia est, nāscendī incerta condiciō; et quod sine sēnsū nāscimur, cum voluptāte servāmur, — profectō, quoniam illum qui hanc urbem condidit ad deōs immortalis benevolentiā fāmāque sustulimus, esse apud vōs posterōsque vestrōs in honōre debēbit is quī eandem hanc urbem conditam amplificātamque servāvit. Nam tōtī urbī, templis, delūbris, tēctis ac moenibus subiectōs prope iam ignis circumda- 5 tōsque restinximus; idemque gladiōs in rem pūblicam dēstrictōs rettudimus, mucrōnēsque eōrum ā iugulis vestris dēiēcimus. 3. Quae quoniam in senātū inlūstrāta, pate-facta, comperta sunt per mē, vōbīs iam expōnam breviter, Quiritēs, ut et quantā et quā ratiōne investigāta et compre- 10 hēnsa sint, vōs quī ignōrātis et exspectātis scīre possitis.

The Story of the Arrest.

Principiō, ut Catilina paucis ante diēbus ērūpit ex urbe, cum sceleris suī sociōs, hūiusce nefārii belli ācerrimōs ducēs, Rōmae reliquisset, semper vigilāvi et prōvidi, Qui-ritēs, quem ad modum in tantis et tam absconditis insidiis 15 salvi esse possēmus. II. Nam tum, cum ex urbe Catilinam ēiciēbam, — nōn enim iam vereor hūius verbī invidiam, cum illa magis sit timenda, quod vivus exierit, — sed tum, cum illum exterminārī volēbam, aut reliquam coniūrātōrum ma-num simul exitūram, aut eōs quī restitissent infirmōs sine 20 illō ac debilis fore putābam. 4. Atque ego, ut vidi quōs māximō furōre et scelere esse inflammātōs sciēbam eōs nōbiscum esse, et Rōmae remānsisse, in eō omnis diēs noctisque cōsūmpsī, ut quid agerent, quid mōlirentur, sentīrem ac vidērem; ut, quoniam auribus vestris propter incrēdi- 25 bilem māgnitudinem sceleris minōrem fidem faceret ōrātiō mea, rem ita comprehenderem, ut tum dēnum animis salūti vestrae prōvidērētis, cum oculis maleficiū ipsum vidērētis.
Itaque, ut comperī lēgātōs Allobrogum, bellī Trānsalpīnī et tumultūs Gallicī excitandī causā, ā P. Lentulō esse sollici- 30 tātōs, eōsque in Galliam ad suōs civīs, eōdemque itinere cum litteris mandātisque ad Catilinam esse missōs, comitemque eis adiūctum esse T. Volturcium, atque huic ad Catilinam esse datās litterās, facultātem mihi oblātam putāvi, ut — quod erat difficillimum, quodque ego semper optābam ab dis immortalibus — tōta rēs nōn solum ā mē, 5 sed etiam ā senātū et ā vōbis manifestō dēprenderetur.

Interim, tertiā ferē vigiliā exāctā, cum iam pontem Mulvium māgnō comitātū lēgātī Allobrogum ingredī inciperent, ūnāque Volturcius, fit in eōs impetus; ēdūcuntur et ab illis gladii et ā nostris. The Conspirators Arrested.

III. Tum, interventū Pomptinī atque Flaccī, pūgna [quae erat commissa] sēdātur. Litterae, quaecumque erant in eō comitātū, integris signis praetōribus trāduntur; ipsī comprehēnsi ad mē, cum iam dilūcēsceret, dēdūcuntur. Atque 10 hōrum omnium scelerum improbissimum māchinātorem Cimbrum Gabinium statim ad mē, nihil dum suspicantem, vocāvi; deinde item arcessitus est L. Statilius, et post eum C. Cethēgus; tardissimē autem Lentulus vēnit, crēdō quod in litteris dandis praeter cōsuētūdinem proximō nocte vigi- 15 lārat. 7. Cum summīs ac clārissimis hūius civitātis viris (quī audītā rē frequentēs ad mē māne convēnerant) litterās ā mē prius aperiri quam ad senātum dēferrem placeret, — nē, si nihil esset inventum, temerē ā mē tantus tumultus iniectus civitāti vidērētur, — negāvi mē esse factūrum, ut dē 20 periculō publicō nōn ad cōsiliū publicum rem integram dēferrem. Etenim, Quiritēs, si ea quae erant ad mē dēlāta reperta nōn essent, tamen ego nōn arbitrābar, in tantis rei publicae periculis, esse mihi nimiam diligentiam pertimēscendam. Senātum frequentem celeriter, ut vidistis, coēgi. 25 8. Atque intereā statim, admonitū Allobrogum, C. Sulpicium praetōrem, fortem virum, mīsī, quī ex aedibus Cethēgī si quid tēlōrum esset efferret: ex quibus ille māximum sicārum numerum et gladiōrum extulit.

The Conspirators before the Senate.

IV. Intrōdūxī Volturcium sine Gallis: fidem publicam 30 iūssū senātūs dedī: hortātus sum, ut ea quae sciret sine timōre indicāret. Tum ille dixit, cum vix sē ex māgnō timōre recreāsset, ab Lentulō sē habēre ad Catilinam mandāta et litterās, ut servōrum praesidiō ūterētur, ut ad urbem quam primum cum exercitū accēderet: id autem eō cōn-5 siliō, ut, cum urbem ex omnibus partibus quem ad modum dēscriptum distribūtumque erat incendissent, caedemque infīnitam civium fēcissent, praestō esset ille, quī et fugientis exciperet, et sē cum hīs urbānis ducibus coniungeret.

 / 9. Intrōductī autem Galli iūs iūrāndum sibi et litterās ab
 10 Lentulō, Cethēgō, Statiliō ad suam gentem data esse dīxērunt, atque ita sibi ab his et ā L. Cassiō esse praescriptum, ut equitātum in Ītaliā quam primum mitterent; pedestris sibi cōpiās nōn dēfutūrās. Lentulum autem sibi cōfirmāsse, ex fātis Sibyllinis haruspicumque respōnsis, sē esse tertium
 15 illum Cornēlium, ad quem rēgnū hūius urbis atque imperium pervenire esset necesse; Cinnam ante sē et Sūllam fuisse; eundemque dīxisse fātālem hunc annum esse ad interitum hūius urbis atque imperī, quī esset annus decimus post virginum absolūtiōnem, post Capitōlī autem incēnsiō-20 nem vicēsimus. 10. Hanc autem Cethēgō cum cēterīs contrōversiam fuisse dīxērunt, quod Lentulō et aliis Sātūrnālībus caedem fieri atque urbem incendi placēret, Cethēgō nimium id longum vidērētur.

The Letters Produced.

V. Āc nē longum sit, Quiritēs, tabellās prōferri iussimus, 25 quae ā quōque dicēbantur datae. Primum ostendimus Cethēgō signum: cōgnōvit. Nōs linum incidimus: lēgimus. Erat scriptum ipsius manū Allobrogum senātuī et populō, sēsē quae eōrum lēgātis cōfirmāsset factūrum essē; ōrāre ut item illi facerent quae sibi eōrum lēgātī recēpissent.
 30 Tum Cethēgus, quī paulō ante aliquid tamen dē gladiis āc sicis, quae apud ipsum erant dēprehēnsa, respondisset dīxissetque sē semper bonōrum ferrāmentōrum studiōsum fuisse, recitātis litteris dēbilitātus atque abiectus cōnscentiā repente conticuit. Intrōductus est Statilius : cōgnōvit et signum et manum suam. Recitātae sunt tabellae in eandem ferē sententiam : cōfessus est. Tum ostendī tabellās Lentulō, et quaesivī cōgnōsceretne signum. Adnuit. 'Est vērō,' in- 5 quam, 'nōtum quidem signum, imāgō avi tuī, clārissimī virī, quī amāvit ūnicē patriam et civis suōs ; quae quidem tē ā tantō scelere etiam mūta revocāre dēbuit.' 11. Leguntur eādē ratiōne ad senātum Allobrogum populumque litterae.

Lentulus Confesses.

Sī quid dē his rēbus dicere vellet, fēcī potestātem. Atque 10 ille ^{primo} quidem negāvit ; post autem aliquantō, tōtō iam indiciō expositō atque ēditō, surrēxit ; quaesivit ā Gallis quid sibi esset cum eis, quam ob rem domum suam vēnissent, itemque ā Volturciō. Quī cum illi breviter cōstanter- 15 que respondissent, per quem ad eum quotiēnsque vēnissent, quaesissentque ab eō nihilne sēcum esset dē fātis Sibyllinis locūtus, tum ille subitō, scelere dēmēns, quanta cōnscentiae vis esset ostendit. Nam cum id posset infitiārī, repente praeter opiniōnem omnium cōfessus est. Ita eum nōn modo ingenium illud et dicendī exercitātiō, quā semper valuit, sed etiam propter vim sceleris manifestī atque depre-5 hēnsi impudentia, quā superābat omnis, improbitāsque dēfēcit.

ONE OF THE LENTULI.

12. Volturcius vērō subito litterās prōferri atque aperiri iubet, quās sibi ā Lentulō ad Catilinam datās esse dicēbat. Atque ibi vehementissimē perturbātus Lentulus tamen et 10 signum et manum suam cōgnōvit. Erant autem [scriptae] sine nōmine, sed ita: Quis sim sciēs ex eō quem ad tē mīsī. Cūrā ut vir sis, et cōgitā quem in locum sis prōgressus; vidē ecquid tibi iam sit necesse, et cūrā ut omnium tibi auxiliā adiungās, etiam infimōrum. Gabinius deinde intrōductus, cum 15 primō impudenter respondēre coepisset, ad extrēmum nihil ex eīs quae Galli insimulābant nēgāvit. 13. Ac mihi quidem, Quiritēs, cum illa certissima visa sunt argūmenta atque indicia sceleris, — tabellae, signa, manūs, dēnique ūnius cuiusque cōfessiō; tum multō certiōra illa, — color, oculi, 20 voltus, taciturnitās. Sic enim obstupuerant, sic terram intuēbantur, sic fūrtim nōn numquam inter sēsē aspiciēbant, ut nōn iam ab aliīs indicārī, sed indicāre sē ipsī vidērentur.

Action of the Senate.

VI. Indiciis expositis atque ēditis, senātum cōsului dē summā rē pūblicā quid fieri placēret. Dictae sunt ā 25 principibus ācerrimae ac fortissimae sententiae, quās senātus sine ūllā varietāte est secūtus. Et quoniam nōndum est perscriptum senātūs cōsultum, ex memoriā vōbis, Quiritēs, quid senātus cēnsuerit expōnam. 14. Primum mihi grātiaē verbis amplissimis aguntur, quod virtūte, 30 cōnsiliō, prōvidentiā meā rēs pūblica māximis periculis sit liberāta: deinde L. Flaccus et C. Pomptinus praetōrēs, quod eōrum operā fortī fidēlique ūsus essem, meritō āc iūre laudantur; atque etiam virō fortī, conlēgae meō, laus impertitur, quod eōs quī hūius coniūratiōnis participēs fuissent ā suis et ā rei pūblicae cōsiliis remōvisset. Atque ita cēnsuerunt, ut P. Lentulus, cum sē praetūrā abdicāset, in custōdiam trāderētur; itemque ut C. Cethēgus, L. Stati-lius, P. Gabīnius, quī omnēs praesentēs erant, in custōdiam trāderentur; atque idem hōc dēcrētum est in L. Cassium, quī sibi prōcūratiōnem incendendae urbis dēpoposcerat, in M. Cēpārium, cui ad sollicitandōs pāstōrēs Apūliam attribūtam esse erat indicātum, in P. Furium, quī est ex eis colōnis quōs Faesulās L. Sūlla dēdūxit, in Q. Annium Chilonem, quī ūnā cum hōc Furiō semper erat in hāc Allobrogum sollicitatiōne versātus, in P. Umbrēnum, libertinum hominem, ā quō primum Gallōs ad Gabīnium perductōs esse cōstābat. Atque eā lēnitāte senātus est ūsus, Qui-ritēs, ut ex tantā coniūratiōne, tantāque hāc multitudine domesticōrum hostium, novem hominum perditissimōrum poenā rē pūblicā cōservātā, reliquōrum mentis sārārī posse arbitrārētur. 15. Atque etiam supplicātiō dis immortalibus prō singulārī eōrum meritō meō nōmine dēcrēta est, quod mihi primum post hanc urbem conditam togātō contigit. Et hīs verbis dēcrēta est: quod urbem incendiis, caede cīvīs, Italiam bellō liberāssem. Quae supplicātiō si cum cēteris cōferātur, hōc interest, quod cēterae bene gestā, haec ūna cōservātā rē pūblicā cōstitutā est. Atque illud, quod faciendum primum fuit, factum atque trānsāctum est. Nam P. Lentulus — quamquam patefactis indiciis, cōfessiōnibus suis, iūdicīō senātūs nōn modo praetōris iūs, vērū etiam cīvīs āmiserat — tamen magistrātū sē abdicāvit, ut, quae religiō. C. Mariō, clārissimō virō, nōn fuerat, quō minus C. Glauciam, dē quō nihil nōminātīm erat dēcrētum, praetōrem occideret, eā nōs religiōne in privātō P. Lentulō pūniendō liberārēmur.

The Conspiracy now Thwarted.

VII. 16. Nunc quoniam, Quirītēs, cōnsclerātissimī periculōsissimīque bellī nefariōs ducēs captōs iam et comprehēnsōs tenētis, existimāre dēbētis omnīs Catilīnae cōpiās, omnīs spēs atque opēs, hīs dēpulsis urbis periculis, concidis. Quem quidem ego cum ex urbe pellēbam, hōc prōvidēbam animō, Quirītēs, — remōtō Catilinā, nōn mihi esse P. Lentulī somnum, nec L. Cassī adipēs, nec C. Cethēgī furiōsam temeritātem pertimēscendam.

Character of Catiline.

Ille erat ūnus timendus ex istīs omnibus, sed tam diū, dum urbis moenibus continēbātur. Omnia nōrat, omnium aditūs tenēbat: appellāre, temptāre, sollicitāre poterat, audēbat: erat ei cōnsilium ad facinus aptum, cōnsiliō autem neque manus neque lingua deērat. Iam ad certās rēs cōnficiendās certōs hominēs dēlēctōs ac dēscriptōs habēbat. Neque vērō, cum aliquid mandārat, cōnfectum putābat: nihil erat quod nōn ipse obiret, occurreret, vigilāret, labōrāret. Frīgus, sitim, famem, ferre poterat. 17. Hunc ego hominem tam ācrem, tam audācem, tam parātum, tam callidum, tam in scelere vigilantem, tam in perditis rēbus diligentem, nisi ex domesticis insidiis in castrēse latrōcinium compulissem, — dicam id quod sentiō, Quirītēs, — nōn facile hanc tantam mōlem malī ā cervicibus vestris dēpulissem. Nōn ille nōbis Sātūrnālīa cōstituisset, neque tantō ante exsilī ac fātī diem rei pūblicae dēnūntiāvisset; neque com- mississet ut signum, ut litterae suae testēs manifestī sceleris dēprehenderentur. Quae nunc illō absente sic gesta sunt, ut nūllum in privātā domō fūrtum umquam sit tam palam inventum, quam haec tanta in rē pūblicā coniūrātiō manifestō inventa atque dēprehēnsa est. Quod si Catilīna in urbe ad hanc diem remānsisset, quamquam, quoad fuit, omnibus eius cōsiliis occurrī atque obstiti, tamen, ut levisimē dicam, dīmicandum nōbīs cum illō fuisset; neque nōs umquam, cum illē in urbe hostis esset, tantis periculis rem pūblicam tantā pāce, tantō ōtiō, tantō silentiō liberāssēmus.

Thanks Due to the Gods.

VIII. 18. Quamquam haec omnia, Quiritēs, ita sunt ā 5 mē administrāta, ut deōrum immortalium nūtū atque cōsiliō et gesta et prōvisa esse videantur; idque cum coniectūrā cōsequi possumus, quod vix videtur hūmāni cōsili tantarum rerum gubernātiō esse potuisse; tum vērō ita praesentēs hīs temporibus opem et auxilium nōbīs tulērunt, 10 ut eōs paene oculis vidēre possēmus. Nam ut illa omittam, — visās nocturnō tempore ab occidente facēs, ārdōremque caeli, ut fulminum iactūs, ut terrae mōtūs relinquam, ut omittam cētera, quae tam multa nōbīs cōsulibus facta sunt, ut haec, quae nunc fiunt, canere dī immortalēs vidērentur, 15
— hōc certē, quod sum dictūrus, neque praetermittendum neque reliquendum est.

Signs and Omens.

19. Nam profectō memoriā tenētis, Cottā et Torquātō cōsulibus, complūrīs in Capitōliō rēs dē caelō esse percussās, cum et simulācra deōrum dēpulsā sunt, et statuae 20 veterum hominum dēiectae, et lēgum aera liquefacta: tāctus est etiam ille qui hanc urbem condidit Rōmulus, quem inaurātum in Capitōliō, parvum atque lactentem, ūberibus lupinīs inhiantem, fuisse meministis. Quō quidem tempore cum haruspicēs ex tōtā Etrūriā convēnissent, caedēs atque 25 incendia et lēgum interitum et bellum cīvile ac domesticum, et tōtius urbis atque imperī occāsū appropinquāre dixerunt, nisi dī immortalēs, omni ratiōne plācati, suō nūmine prope fāta ipsa flēxissent. 20. Itaque illōrum respōnsis tum et lūdī per decem diēs facti sunt, neque rēs ūlla quae 30 ad plācandōs deōs pertinēret praetermissa est; idemque iussērunt simulācrum Iovis facere māius, et in excelsō collocāre, et (contrā atque antea fuerat) ad orientem convertere; ac sē spērāre dixerunt, sī illud signum, quod vidētis, 5 sōlis ortum et forum cūriamque cōspiceret, fore ut ea cōsilia, quae clam essent inita contrā salutem urbis atque imperī, inlūstrārentur, ut ā senātū populōque Rōmānō perspici possent. Atque [illud signum] conlocandum cōsulēs illi locāverunt; sed tanta fuit operis tarditās, ut neque 10 superiōribus cōsulibus, neque nōbīs ante hodiernum diem, conlocārētur.

IX. 21. Hic quis potest esse tam āversus ā vērō, tam praeceps, tam mente captus, quī neget haec omnia quae vidēmus, praecipuēque hanc urbem, deōrum immortalium 15 nūtū ac potestāte administrārī? Etenim cum esset ita respōnsum, caedēs, incendia, interitum rei pūblīcae comparārī, et ea per civīs, — quae tum propter māgnitudinem scelerum nōn nullis incrēdibilia vidēbantur, — ea nōn modo cōgitāta ā nefāriis civibus, vērū etiam suscepta esse sēnsistis. Illud vērō nōne ita praesēns est, ut nūtū Iovis 20 Optimī Māximī factum esse videātur, ut, cum hodiernō diē māne per forum meō iussū et coniūrātī et eōrum indicēs in aedem Concordiae dūcerentur, eō ipsō tempore signum staturētur? quō conlocātō atque ad vōs senātumque conversō, 25 omnia [et senātus et vōs] quae erant cōgitāta contrā salutem omnium, inlūstrāta et patefacta vidistis. 22. Quō etiam māiōre sunt istī odiō suppliciōque dignī, quī nōn solum vestris domiciliis atque tēctis, sed etiam deōrum templis atque dēlūbris sunt fūnestōs ac nefāriōs ignis inferre cōnātī. 30 Quibus ego sī mē restitisse dicam, nimium mihi sūmam, et nōn sim ferendus. Ille, ille Iuppiter restitit: ille Capitōlium, ille haec templa, ille cūnctam urbem, ille vōs omnis salvōs esse voluit. Dis ego immortalibus ducibus hanc

X. 23. Quam ob rem, Quirītēs, quoniam ad omnia pulvināria supplicatiō dēcrēta est, celebrātōte illōs diēs cum 15 coniugibus ac liberis vestris. Nam multī saepe honōrēs dīs immortalibus iūsti habitī sunt ac dēbitī, sed profectō iūstiōrēs numquam. IV. SENTENCE OF THE CONSPIRATORS.

(In L. Catilinam, Ōrātiō IV.)

IN THE SENATE, DEC. 5.

Two days later the Senate was convened, to determine what was to be done with the prisoners. It was a fundamental principle of the Roman constitution that no citizen should be put to death without the right of appeal to the people. Against the view of Cæsar, which favored perpetual confinement, Cicero urged that, by the fact of taking up arms against the Republic, the conspirators had forfeited their citizenship, and that therefore the law did not protect them. This view prevailed, and the conspirators — Lentulus, Cethegus, Statilius, Gabinius, and Cæparius — were strangled by the public executioners.

Solicitude of the Senate for Cicero.

VIDEŌ, patrēs cōscriptī, in mē omnium vestrū ōra atque oculōs esse conversōs. Videō vōs nōn solum dē vestrō āc rei pūblicae, vērū etiam, sī id dēpulsum sit, dē meō periculō esse sollicitōs. Est mihi iūcunda in malis et 10 grāta in dolōre vestra ergā mē voluntās: sed eam, per deōs immortālis, dēpōnite; atque oblītī salūtis meae, dē vōbīs āc dē vestrīs liberis cōgitāte. Mihi sī haec condiciō cōsulātus data est, ut omnīs acerbitatēs, omnīs dolōrēs cruciātusque perferrem, feram nōn solum fortiter, vērū etiam libenter, 15 dum modo meis labōribus vōbis populōque Rōmānō dignitās salūsque pariātur. 2. Ego sum ille cōsul, patrēs cōscriptī, cui nōn forum, in quō omnis aequitās continētur, nōn campus cōsulāribus auspiciis cōsecrātus, nōn cūria, sum-5 mum auxilium omnium gentium, nōn domus, commūne perfugium, nōn lectus ad quiētem datus, nōn dēnique haec sēdēs honōris [sella curūlis] umquam vacua mortis periculō atque insidiis fuit. Ego multa tacui, multa pertuli, multa concessi, multa meō quōdam dolōre in vestrō timōre sāvavi.

 10 Nunc si hunc exitum cōsulātus mei dī immortalēs esse voluērunt, ut vōs populumque Rōmānum ex caede miserimā, coniugēs liberōsque vestrōs virginēsque Vestālis ex acerbissimā vēratiōne, templa atque dēlūbra, hanc pulcher-. rimam patriam omnium nostrūm ex foedissimā flammā, 15 tōtam Italiā ex bellō et vāstitātē ēriperem, quaecumque mihi ūnī prōpōnētur fortūna, subeātur. Etenim si P. Lentulus suum nōmen, inductus ā vātibus, fātāle ad perniciem rei pūblicae fore putāvit, cūr ego nōn laeter meum cōsulātum ad salūtem populi Rōmāni prope fātālem exstītisse?

They Need not Fear for him.

20 II. 3. Quā rē, patrēs cōscriptī, cōsulite vōbis, prōspice patriae, cōservāte vōs, coniugēs, liberōs fortunāsque vestrās, populi Rōmāni nōmen salūtemque dēfendite: mihi parcere ac dē mē cōgitāre dēsinite. Nam primum dēbeō spērāre omnis deōs, qui huic urbī praesident, prō eō mihi ac
 25 mereor relātūrōs esse grātiam; deinde, si quid obtigerit, aequō animō parātōque moriar. Nam neque turpis mors fortī virō potest accidere, neque immātūra cōsulārī, nec misera sapientī. Nec tamen ego sum ille ferreus, quī frātris cārissimī atque amantissimī praesentis maerōre nōn movear, 30 hōrumque omnium lacrimis, ā quibus mē circumsessum vidētis. Neque meam mentem nōn domum saepe revocat exanimāta uxor, et abiecta metū filia, et parvolus filius, quem mihi videtur amplecti res publica tamquam obsidem consulatū meī, neque ille, quī exspectāns huius exitum diēi adstat in conspectū meō gener. Moveor his rebus omnibus, sed in eam partem, utī salvī sint vobiscum omnēs, etiam si mē vīs aliqua oppresserit, potius quam et illi et nōs unā rei 5 publicae peste pereāmus.

4. Quā rē, patrēs conscripti, incumbite ad salutē rei publicae, circumspicite omnis procellās, quae impendent nisi prōvidētis. Nōn Ti. Gracchus, quod iterum tribūnus plēbis fieri voluit, nōn C. Gracchus, quod agrariōs concitare 10 cōnātus est, nōn L. Sāturninus, quod C. Memmīum occidit, in discrimen aliquod atque in vestrae severitātis iudiciū addūcitur: tenentur ei quī ad urbis incendium, ad vestram omnium caedem, ad Catilinam accipiendum, Rōmae restitērunt; tenentur litterae, signa, manūs, dēnique unius cuius- 15 que cōfessiō; sollicitantur Allobroges, servitia excitantur, Catilina arcessitur; id est initum cōsiliū, ut interfectis omnibus nēmō nē ad dēplōrandum quidem populī Rōmāni nōmen atque ad lamentandam tantī imperī calamitatem relinquatur.

How shall the Conspirators be Punished?

III. 5. Haec omnia indicēs dētulērunt, rei cōfessi sunt, vōs multis iam iudiciis iudicāvistis: primum quod mihi grātiās ēgistis singulāribus verbis, et meā virtūte atque diligentia perditōrum hominum coniūratiōnem patefactam esse dēcrēvistis; deinde quod P. Lentulum sē abdicāre 25 praetūrā coēgistis; tum quod eum et cēterōs, dē quibus iudicāstis, in custōdiam dandōs cēnsuistis; māximēque quod meō nōmine supplicatiōnem dēcrēvistis, quī honōs togātō habitus ante mē est nēminī; postrēmō hesternō diē praemia lēgātis Allobrogum Titōque Volturciō dedistis am- 30 plissima. Quae sunt omnia eius modī, ut ei quī in custōdiam nōminātī datī sunt sine ūllā dubitatiōne ā vōbis damnāti esse videantur.

6. Sed ego institui referre ad vōs, patrēs cōscripti, tamquam integrum, et dē factō quid iūdicētis, et dē poenā quid cēseātis. Illa praedicam quae sunt cōsulis. Ego māgnū in rē publicā versārī furōrem, et nova quaedam miscērī
 5 et concitārī mala iam pridem vidēbam; sed hanc tantam, tam exitiōsam habērī coniūratiōnem ā cīvibus numquam putāvī. Nunc quicquid est, quōcumque vestrae mentēs inclinant atque sententiae, statuendū vōbis ante noctem est. Quantum facinus ad vōs delātum sit vidētis. Huic si
 10 paucōs putātis adfinis esse, vehementer errātis. Lātius opiniōne dissēminātum est hōc malum: mānāvit nōn solum per Italiam, vērū etiam trāscendit Alpīs, et obscurē serpēns multās iam prōvinciās occupāvit. Id opprimī sustentandō ac prōlātandō nullō pāctō potest. Quācumque ratiōne 15 placet, celeritēr vōbis vindicandū est.

Silanus Proposes Death; Caesar, Imprisonment.

IV. 7. Videō adhūc duās esse sententiās: ūnam D. Silānī, quī cēset eōs, quī haec delēre cōnāti sunt, morte esse multandōs; alteram C. Caesaris, quī mortis poenam removet, cēterōrum suppliciōrum omnis acerbitatēs amplec-
 20 titur. Uterque et prō suā dignitāte et prō rērum māgnitūdine in summā sevērītate versātur. Alter eōs quī nōs omnis, [quī populum Rōmānum,] vitā privāre cōnāti sunt, quī delēre imperium, quī populi Rōmānī nōmen extinguere, pūctum temporis fruī vitā et hōc commūnī spīritū nōn putat 25 oportēre; atque hōc genus poenae saepe in improbōs cīvīs in hāc rē publicā esse ūsūrpātum recordātur. Alter intellegit mortem ab dis immortalibus nōn esse supplicī causā cōstitutam, sed aut necessitatem nātūrae, aut labōrum ac miseriārum quiētem. Itaque eam sapientēs numquam in-30 vitī, fortēs saepe etiam libenter oppetivērunt. Vincula vērō et ea sempiterna certē ad singulārem poenam nefāriī sceleris inventa sunt. Mūnicipiīs dispertiri iubet. Habēre vidētur ista rēs inīquitātem sī imperāre velis, difficultātem sī rogāre. Dēcernātur tamen, sī placet. 8. Ego enim suscipiam, et (ut spērō) reperiam quī id quod salūtis omnium causā statueritis, nōn putent esse suae dignitātis recūsāre. Adiungit gravem poenam mūnicipibus, sī quis eōrum vincula rūperit: horribilis custōdiās circumdat, et dignās scelere hominum perditōrum; sancit nē quis eōrum poenam quōs condemnat, aut per senātum aut per populum, levāre possit; ēripit etiam spem, quae sōla hominem in miseriīs cōsōlārī solet; bona praetereā pūblicārī iubet; vitā sōlam relinquit nefāriis hominibus, quā sī ēripuisset, multōs ūnō dolōrēs animī atque corporis et omnīs scelerum poenās adēmisset. Itaque, ut aliqua in vitā formidō improbīs esset posita, apud inferōs ēius modī quaedam illī antiqūi supplicia impiīs cōstitutā esse voluērunt, quod vidēlicet intellegēbant, eis remōtis, nōn esse mortem ipsam pertimēscendam. 5

Cæsar's Proposition Discussed.

V. 9. Nunc, patrēs cōscripti, ego meā videō quid intersit. Sī eritis secūti sententiam C. Caesaris, quoniam hanc is in rē pūblicā viam quae populāris habētur secūtus est, fortasse minus erunt — hōc auctōre et cōgnitōre hūiusce sententiae — mihi populārēs impetūs pertimēscendī: sī illam alteram, nesciō an amplius mihi negōtī contrahātur. Sed tamen meōrum periculōrum ratiōnēs utilitās rei pūblicae vincat. Habēmus enim ā Caesare, sicut ipsius dignitās et māiōrum ēius amplitūdō postulābat, sententiam tamquam obsidem perpetuae in rem pūblicam voluntātis. Intellēctum est quid interesset inter levitātem contiōnātōrum et animum vērē populārem, salūtī populī cōsulentem. 10. Videō dē istis, quī sē populāris habērī volunt, abesse nōn nēminem, nē dē capite vidēlicet cīvium Rōmānōrum sententiam ferat. At is et nūdius tertius in custōdiam cīvīs Rōmānōs dedit, et supplicatiōnem mihi dēcrēvit, et indicēs hesternō diē māxi 20 mīs praemiīs adfēcit. Iam hōc nēmini dubium est, quī reō custōdiam, quaesītōrī grātulātiōnem, indicī praemium dēcrē-vit, quid dē tōtā rē et causā iūdicārit. At vērō C. Caesar intellegit lēgem Semprōniam esse dē civibus Rōmānīs cōn-5 stitūtā; quī autem reī pūblicae sit hostis, eum civem nūllō modō esse posse; dēnique ipsum lātōrem Semprōniae lēgis iūssū populī poenās reī pūblicae dēpendisse. Īdem ipsum Lentulum, largītōrem et prōdigum, nōn putat, cum dē perniciē populī Rōmānī, exitiō hūius urbis tam acerbē, tam 10 crūdēlīter cōgitārit, etiam appellārī posse populārem. Ita-que homō mītissimus atque lēnissimus nōn dubitat P. Lentulum aeternīs tenebrīs vinculisque mandāre, et sancit in posterum, nē quis hūius suppliciō levandō sē iactāre, et in perniciem populī Rōmānī posthāc populāris esse possit:

 15 adiungit etiam pūblicātiōnem bonōrum, ut omnis animī cru-ciātus et corporis etiam egestās ac mendicitās cōsequātur.

Death None too Severe a Penalty.

VI. 11. Quam ob rem, sive hōc statueritis, dederitis mihi comitem ad contiōnem populō cārum atque iūcundum;
 sive Silānī sententiam sequī mālueritis, facile mē [atque 20 vōs] crūdēlītātis vituperātiōne exsolveritis, atque obtinēbō eam multō lēniōrem fuisse. Quamquam, patrēs cōscriptī, quae potest esse in tantī sceleris immānitātē pūniendā crū-dēlītās? Ego enim dē meō sēnsū iūdicō. Nam ita mihi salvā rē pūblicā vōbiscum perfrui liceat, ut ego, quod in hāc 25 causā vehementior sum, nōn atrōcitatē animī moveor — quis est enim me mītior? — sed singulārī quādam hūmānitātē et misericordiā. Videor enim mihi vidēre hanc urbem, lūcem orbis terrārum atque arcem omnium gentium, subitō ūnō incendiō concidentem. Cernō animō sepultā in patriā mise-30 rōs atque insepultōs acervōs civium. Versātur mihi ante oculōs aspectus Cethēgī, et furor in vestrā caede bacchantis.

12. Cum vērō mihi prōposui rēgnantem Lentulum, sicut ipse ex fātis sē spērāsse cōfessus est, purpurātum esse huic Gabīnium, cum exercitū vēnisse Catilinam, tum lamentātiōnem mātrem familiās, tum fugam virginum atque puerōrum ac vēxātiōnem virginum Vestālium perhorrēscō; et quia mihi vehementer haec videntur misera atque miseranda, 5 idcirco in eōs quī ea perficere voluērunt mē sevērūm vehementemque praebeō. Etenim quaerō, sī quis pater familiās, liberīs suis a servō interfectīs, uxōre occisā, incensā domō, supplicium dē servō nōn quam acerbissimum sūmpserit, utrum is clēmēns ac misericors, an inhūmānissimus et crūdēlissimus esse videātur? Mihi vērō importūnus ac ferreus, quī nōn dolōre et cruciātū nocentis suum dolōrem cruciātumque lēnierit. Sic nōs in hīs hominibus, — quī nōs, quī coniugēs, quī liberōs nostrōs trucidāre voluērunt; quī singulās ūnius cūiusque nostrūm domōs et hōc ūniversum rei 15 pūblīcae domicilium dēlere cōnāti sunt; quī id ēgērunt, ut gentem Allobrogum in vestigiīs hūius urbis atque in cinere dēflagrātī imperī conlocārent, — sī vehementissimī fuerimus, misericordēs habēbimur: sī remissiōrēs esse voluerimus, summae nobis crūdēlītātis in patriae cīviumque perniciē 20 fāma subeunda est.

Opinion of L. Caesar.

13. Nisi vērō cuiquam L. Caesar, vir fortissimus et amantissimus rei pūblīcae, crūdēlior nūdius tertius vīsus est, cum sorōris suae, fēminae lēctissimae, virum praesentem et audientem vitā privāndum esse dixit, cum avum suum iūssū 25 cōsulis interfectum, filiumque eius impūberem, lēgātum a patre missum, in carcere necātum esse dixit. Quōrum quod simile factum? quod initum dēlendae rei pūblīcae cōsiliū? Largitiōnis voluntās tum in rē pūblicā versāta est, et partium quaedam contentiō. Atque eō tempore hūius 30 avus Lentulī, vir clārissimus, armātus Gracchum est persecūtus. Ille etiam grave tum vulnus accēpit, nē quid dē summā rē publicā dēminuerētur : hic ad ēvertenda rei publi-cae fundāmenta Gallōs arcessit, servitia concitat, Catilinam vocat, attribuit nōs trucidandōs Cethēgō, et cēterōs civis interficiendōs Gabiniō, urbem inflammandam Cassiō, tōtam 5 Italiam vāstandam diripiendamque Catilinae. Vereāmini, cēseō, nē in hōc scelere tam immāni ac nefandō nimis aliquid sevērē statuisse videāmini : multō magis est verē-dum nē remissōne poenae crūdēlēs in patriam, quam nē sevērītate animadversōnis nimis vehementēs in acerbissimōs 10 hostis, fuisse videāmur.

Severe Measures will be Supported by the People.

VII. 14. Sed ea quae exaudiō, patrēs cōscripti, dissimulāre nōn possum. Iaciuntur enim vōcēs, quae perveniunt ad auris meās, eōrum quī verēri videntur ut habeam satis praesidi ad ea quae vōs statueritis hodiernō diē trānsigunda.
15 Omnia et prōvisa et parāta et cōstitutā sunt, patrēs cōscripti, cum meā summā cūrā atque diligentīā, tum multō etiam māiōre populī Rōmāni ad summum imperium retinendum et ad commūnis fortūnās cōservandās voluntāte.
Omnēs adsunt omnium ōrdinum hominēs, omnium dēnique 20 aetātum : plēnum est forum, plēna templa circum forum, plēni omnēs aditūs hūius templi ac loci. Causa est enim post urbem conditam haec inventa sōla, in quā omnēs sentirent ūnum atque idem, praeter eōs quī, cum sibi vidērent esse pereundum, cum omnibus potius quam sōli perire volu-25 ērunt. 15. Hōsce ego hominēs excipio et sēcerno libenter, neque in improbōrum civium, sed in acerbissimōrum hostium numerō habendōs putō.

All Orders in the State United.

Cēteri vērō, di immortalēs ! quā frequentīā, quō studiō, quā virtūte ad commūnem salutē dignitātemque cōsen-30 tiunt ! Quid ego hic equitēs Rōmānōs cōmmemorem ? qui vōbīs ita summam ōrdinis cōnsilique concēdunt, ut vōbiscum dē amōre rēi pūblicae certent; quōs ex multōrum annōrum dissēnsiōne hūius ōrdinis ad societātem concordiamque revo-cātōs hodiernus diēs vōbiscum atque haec causa coniungit:

 quam sī coniūnctiōnem, in cōsulātū cōfirmātam meō, per- 5 petuam in rē pūblicā tenuerimus, cōfirmō vōbīs nūllum posthāc malum cīvile ac domesticum ad ūllam rēi pūblicae partem esse ventūrum. Parī studiō dēfendundae rēi pūblicae convēnisse vidēō tribūnōs aerārīōs, fortissimōs virōs; scribās item ūniversōs, quōs cum cāsū hīc diēs ad aerārium 10 frequentāsset, vidēō ab exspectātiōne sortis ad salūtem commūnem esse conversōs. 16. Omnis ingenuōrum adest multitūdō, etiam tenuissimōrum. Quis est enim cui nōn haec templa, aspectus urbīs, possessiō libertātis, lūx dēnique haec ipsa et [hōc] commūne patriae solum, cum sit cārū tum 15 vērō dulce atque iūcundum?

The Humblest Citizens are Staunch.

VIII. Operae pretium est, patrēs cōscripti, libertinōrum hominum studia cōgnōscere, quī, suā virtūte fortūnam hūius cīvitātis cōsecūti, hanc suam patriam iūdicant, — quam quīdam hīc nātī, et summō locō nātī, nōn patriam suam sed 20 urbem hostium esse iūdicāvērunt. Sed quid ego hōsce hominēs ōrdinēsque commemorō, quōs privātae fortūnae, quōs commūnis rēs pūblica, quōs dēnique libertās, ea quae dulcissima est, ad salūtem patriae dēfendendam excitāvit?
 Servus est nēmō, quī modo tolerābili condiciōne sit servi- 25 tūtis, quī nōn audāciam cīvium perhorrēscat, quī nōn haec stāre cupiat, quī nōn quantum audet et quantum potest cōnferat ad salūtem voluntātis. 17. Quā rē sī quem vestrūm forte commovet hōc, quod auditum est, lēnōnem quendam Lentulī concursāre circum tabernās, pretiō spērāre 30 sollicitārī posse animōs egentium atque imperitōrum, — est id quidem coeptum atque temptātum; sed nūllī sunt inventi tam aut fortunā miserī aut voluntāte perditī, quī nōn illum ipsum sellae atque operis et quaestūs cotidiānī locum, quī nōn cubile ac lectulum suum, quī dēnique nōn cursum hunc ōtiōsum vitae suae salvum esse velint. Multō vērō māxima 5 pars eōrum quī in tabernīs sunt, immo vērō — id enim potius est dicendum — genus hōc ūniversum, amantissimum est ōti. Etenim omne instrūmentum, omnis opera atque quaestus frequentiā cīvium sustentātur, alitur ōtiō: quōrum sī quaestus occlūsīs tabernīs minui solet, quid tandem incēnsīs futū-10 rum fuit?

deesse videāminī prōvidēte. IX. Habētis cōsulem ex plūrimīs periculis et insidiīs atque ex mediā morte, nōn ad 15 vitam suam, sed ad salūtem vestram reservātum. Omnēs ordinēs ad cōservandam rem pūblicam mente, voluntāte, vōce cōsentiunt. Obsessa facibus et tēlis impiae coniūrātiōnis vōbis supplex manūs tendit patria commūnis; vōbis sē, vōbis vitam omnium cīvium, vōbis arcem et Capitōlium, vōbis ārās Penātium, vōbis illum ignem Vestae sempiternum, vōbis omnium deōrum templa atque dēlūbra, vōbis mūrōs atque urbis tēcta commendat. Praetereā dē vestrā vitā, dē coniugum vestrarū atque liberōrum animā, dē fortūnis omnium, dē sēdibus, dē focis vestris, hodiernō diē vōbis iūdicandum est. 19. Habētis ducem memorem vestri, oblitum suī, quae nōn semper facultās datur: habētis omnis ordinēs, omnis hominēs, ūniversum populum Rōmānum — id quod in cīvili causā hodiernō diē primum vidēmus — ūnum atque idem sentientem. Cōgitāte quantis labōribus fundātum imperium, quantā virtūte stabilitam libertātem, 15 quantā deōrum benignitāte auctās exaggerātāsque fortūnās, ūna nox paene dēlērit. Id nē umquam posthāc nōn modo nōn cōnfici, sed nē cōgitārī quidem possit ā civibus, hodiernō diē prōvidendum est. Atque haec nōn ut vōs; qui mihi studiō paene praecurritis, excitārem, locūtus sum; sed ut 20 mea vōx, quae dēbet esse in rē pūblicā princeps, officiō fūncta cōsulārī vidērētur.

Cicero is Undismayed.

X. 20. Nunc, ante quam ad sententiam redeō, dē mē pauca dicam. Ego, quanta manus est coniūrātōrum, quam vidētis esse permāgnam, tantam mē inimicōrum multitudīnem 25 suscēpisse videō: sed eam iūdicō esse turpem et infirmam et abiectam. Quod sī aliquandō alicūius furōre et scelere concitāta manus ista plūs valuerit quam vestra ac rei pūblīcae dignitās, mē tamen meōrum factōrum atque cōsiliōrum numquam, patrēs cōscriptī, poenitēbit. Etenim 30 mors, quam illi fortasse minitantur, omnibus est parāta: vitae tantam laudem, quantā vōs mē vestris dēcrētis hones-tāstis, nēmō est adsecūsus. Cēteris enim semper bene gestā, mihi ūnī cōservatā rē publicā, grātulātiōnem dēcrēvistis.

21. Sit Scīpiō ille clārus, cūius cōnsiliō atque virtūte Hannibal in Africam redire atque Ītaliā dēcēdere coactus
 5 est; ōrnētur alter eximiā laude Āfricānus, quī duās urbis huic imperiō infestissimās, Karthāginem Numantiamque, dēlēvit; habeātur vir ēgregius Paulus ille, cūius currum rēx potentissimus quondam et nōbilissimus Persēs honestāvit; sit aeternā glōriā Marius, quī bis Ītaliā obsidiōne et metū
 10 servitūtis liberāvit; antepōnātur omnibus Pompēius, cūius rēs gestae atque virtutēs isdem quibus sōlis cursus regiōnibus ac terminis continentur: erit profectō inter hōrum laudēs aliquid locī nostrae glōriae, — nisi forte māius est patefacere nōbis prōvinciās quō exire possimus, quam
 15 cūrāre ut etiam illi quī absunt habeant quō victōrēs revertantur. 22. Quamquam est ūnō locō condiciō melior externae victōriae quam domesticae, — quod hostēs aliēnigenae aut oppressi serviunt, aut recepti in amicitiam beneficiō sē obligātōs putant; quī autem ex numerō civium, dēmentia
 20 aliquā dēprāvātī, hostēs patriae semel esse coepērunt, eōs cum ā perniciē rei publicae reppuleris, nec vī coercēre nec beneficiō placēre possis. Quā rē mihi cum perditis civibus aeternum bellum susceptum esse vidēō. Id ego vestrō bonōrumque omnium auxiliō, memoriāque tantōrum pericu-
 25 lōrum, — quae nōn modo in hōc populō, quī servātus est, sed in omnium gentium sermōnibus ac mentibus semper haerēbit, — ā mē atque ā meis facile prōpulsāre posse cōfidō. Neque ūlla profectō tanta vis reperiētur, quae cōiūctiōnem vestram equitumque Rōmānōrum, et tantam 30 cōspirātiōnem bonōrum omnium, cōnfringere et labefactāre possit.

XI. 23. Quae cum ita sint, prō imperiō, prō exercitū, prō prōvinciā, quam neglēxī, prō triumphō cēterisque laudis insignibus, quae sunt ā mē propter urbis vestraeque salūtis custōdiam repudiāta, prō clientēlis hospitiiisque prōvinciālibus, quae tamen urbānis opibus nōn minōre labōre tueor 5 quam comparō, prō his igitur omnibus rēbus, prō meis in vōs singulāribus studiis, prōque hāc quam perspicitis ad cōservandam rem pūblicam diligentīā, nihil ā vōbīs nisi hūius temporis tōtiusque mei cōsulātūs memoriam postulō: quae dum erit vestris fixa mentibus, tūtissimō mē mūrō 10 / saeptum esse arbitrābor. Quod sī meam spem vis improbōrum fefellerit atque superāverit, commendō vōbīs parvum meum filium, cui profectō satis erit praesidi nōn solum ad salutem, vērū etiam ad dignitātem, sī ēius, quī haec omnia suō sōlius periculō cōservārit, illum filium esse memineritis. 15

THE CITIZENSHIP OF ARCHIAS.

(Prō A. Liciniō Archiā Poētā.)

B.C. 62.

THE case of Archias, though not a public one, yet had its origin in the politics of the time. The aristocratic faction, suspecting that much of the strength of their opponents was derived from the fraudulent votes of those who were not citizens, procured in B.C. 65 the passage of the Lex Papia, by which "all the strangers who possessed neither Roman nor Latin burgess-rights were to be ejected from the capital." Archias, the poet, a native of Antioch, but for many years a Roman citizen, a friend and client of Lucius Lucullus, was accused in B.C. 62, by a certain Gratius, under this law, on the ground that he was not a citizen. Cicero, a personal friend of Archias, undertook the defence, and the case was tried before the brother of the orator, Quintus Cicero, then prætor.

It was a very small matter to disprove the charge and establish Archias' claims to citizenship. The greater part of this speech, therefore, is made up of a eulogy upon the poet and upon poetry and literature in general. It is, for this reason, one of the most agreeable of Cicero's orations, and perhaps the greatest favorite of them all.

Earlier Career of Archias.

III. Nam ut primum ex pueris excessit Archiās, atque ab eīs artibus quibus aetās puerilis ad hūmānitatem informārī solet sē ad scribendī studium contulit, primum Antiochiae — nam ibi nātus est locō nōbili — celebrī quondam urbe et 10 cōpiōsā, atque ērudītissimis hominibus liberālissimisque studiis adfluentī, celeriter antecellere omnibus ingenī glōriā contigit. Post in cēteris Asiāe partibus cūctaeque Grae-ciae sīc ēius adventūs celebrābantur, ut fāmam ingenī exspectātiō hominis, exspectātiōnem ipsius adventus admī-15 rātiōque superāret. 5. Erat Italia tunc plēna Graecārum artium ac disciplinārum, studiaque haec et in Latiō vehementius tum colēbantur quam nunc eisdem in oppidis, et hic Rōmae propter tranquillitatem rei pūblīcae nōn negle-gēbantur. Itaque hunc et Tarentinī et Rēgīnī et Neapoli-20 tani civitatē cēterisque praemiis dōnāvunt; et omnēs, quī aliquid dē ingenīis poterant iūdicāre, cōgnitiōne atque hospitīō dīgnū existimāvunt. Hāc tantā celebritāte fāmae cum esset iam absentibus nōtus, Rōmam vēnit Mariō cōnsule et Catulō.

7. Data est civitas Silvānī lēge et Carbōnis: Sī quī foede- 15 rātis civitatibus ascripti fuissent; sī tum, cum lēx ferēbātur, in Italiā domicilium habuissent; et sī sexāgintā diēbus apud praetōrem essent professi. Cum hic domicilium Rōmae mul-tōs iam annōs habēret, professus est apud praetōrem Q.
Metellum familiārissimum suum. 8. Sī nihil aliud nisi dē 20 civitate ac lēge dicimus, nihil dicō amplius: causa dicta est.
Quid enim hōrum infirmāri, Grāti, potest? Hēracliaene esse tum ascriptum negābis? Adest vir summā auctōritāte et religiōne et fidē, M. Lūcullus, quī sē nōn opīnārī sed scire, nōn audisse sed vīdisse, nōn interfuisse sed ēgisse dicit. Adsunt Hēracliēnsēs lēgātī, nōbilissimī hominēs: hūius iūdicī causā cum mandātis et cum publicō testimoniō [vēnē-

 5 runt]; quī hunc ascriptum Hēracliēnsem dicunt. Hic tū tabulās dēsiderās, Hēracliēnsium publicās: quās Italicō bellō incēnsō tabulāriō interisse scīmus omnis. Est rīdiculum ad ea quae habēmus nihil dicere, quaerere quae habēre nōn possumus; et dē hominum memoriā tacēre, litterārum memo-10 riam flāgitāre; et, cum habeās amplissimī virī religiōnem, integerrimī mūnicipī iūs iūrandū fidemque, ea quae dēprā-vārī nullō modō possunt repudiāre, tabulās, quās idem dicis solēre corrumpī, dēsiderāre.

9. An domicilium Rōmae nōn habuit is, quī tot annis ante
 15 civitātem datam sēdem omnium rērū ac fortūnarū suārum Rōmae conlocāvit? At nōn est professus. Immō vērō eis tabulis professus, quae sōlae ex illā professionē conlēgiōque praetōrum obtinent publicārum tabulārum auctoritatem. V. Nam — cum Appī tabulae neglegentius ad-
 20 servātae dicerentur; Gabinī, quā diū incolumis fuit, levitās, post damnationem calamitās omnem tabulārum fidem resignāset — Metellus, homō sāctissimus modestissimusque omnium, tantā diligentīā fuit, ut ad L. Lentulum praetōrem et ad iūdicēs vēnerit, et ūnius nōminis litūrā sē commōtum 25 esse dixerit. In hīs igitur tabulis nullam litūrā in nōmine A. Licinī vidētis.

Evidence of the Census not Necessary.

10. Quae cum ita sint, quid est quod dē ēius civitāte dubitētis, praesertim cum aliis quoque in civitatibus fuerit ascriptus? Etenim, cum mediocribus multis et aut nullā 30 aut humili aliquā arte praeditis grātuitō civitatem in Graeciā hominēs impertiēbant, Rēginōs crēdō aut Locrēnsis aut Neapolitānōs aut Tarentinōs, quod scēnicis artificibus largiri solēbant, id huic summā ingenī praeitō glōriā nōluisse !

 Quid? cum cēteri nōn modo post civitātem datam, sed etiam post lēgem Pāpīam aliquō modō in eōrum mūnici-piōrum tabulās inrēpsērunt, hīc, quī nē ūtitur quidem illis in quibus est scriptus, quod semper sē Hēracliēnsem esse 5 voluit, rēiciētur? 11. Cēnsūs nostrōs requīris scilicet. Est enim obscurum proximīs cēnsōribus hunc cum clārissimō imperātōre L. Lūcullō apud exercitum fuisse; superiōribus, cum eōdem quaestōre fuisse in Asiā; primīs Iūliō et Crassō nūllam populi partem esse cēnsam. Sed — quoniam cēnsus 10 nōn iūs civitātis cōfirmat, ac tantum modo indicat eum quī sit cēnsus [ita] sē iam tum gessisse prō cive — eis tempori-bus quibus tū crīmināris nē ipsius quidem iūdicīō in civium Rōmānōrum iūre esse versātum, et testāmentum saepe fēcit nostrīs lēgibus, et adiit hērēditātēs civium Rōmānōrum, et 15 in beneficiis ad aerārium delātus est ā L. Lūcullō prō cōnsule. VI. Quaere argūmenta, si qua potes: numquam

Study of Letters an Indispensable Relaxation.

12. Quaerēs ā nōbis, Grātī, cūr tantō opere hōc homine dēlectēmur. Quia suppeditat nōbis ubi et animus ex hōc 20 forēnsi strepitū reficiātur, et aurēs conviciō dēfessae con-quiēscant. An tū existimās aut suppetere nōbis posse quod cotīdiē dicāmus in tantā varietāte rērum, nisi animōs nostrōs doctrinā excolāmus; aut ferre animōs tantam posse conten-tiōnem, nisi eōs doctrinā eādē relaxēmus? Ego vērō fateor 25 mē hīs studiis esse dēditum: cēterōs pudeat, si quī sē ita litteris abdidērunt ut nihil possint ex eis neque ad commūnem adferre fructum, neque in aspectum lūcemque prō-ferre: mē autem quid pudeat, quī tot annōs ita vivō, iūdicēs, ut ā nullius umquam mē tempore aut commodō aut otium 30 meum abstrāxerit, aut voluptās avocārit, aut dēnique somnus retardārit? 13. Quā rē quis tandem mē reprehendat, aut quis mihi iūre suscēnseat, sī, quantum cēteris ad suās rēs obeundās, quantum ad fēstōs diēs lūdōrum celebrandōs, quantum ad aliās voluptātēs et ad ipsam requiem animī et corporis concēditur temporum, quantum alii tribuunt tem-5 pestivīs conviviis, quantum dēnique alveolō, quantum pilae, tantum mihi egomet ad haec studia recolenda sūmpserō? Atque hōc ideō mihi concēdendum est magis, quod ex hīs studiis haec quoque crēscit ōrātiō et facultās; quae, quantacumque in mē est, numquam amicōrum periculis dēfuit.

14. Nam nisi multōrum praeceptis multisque litteris mihi ab adulēscentiā suāsissem, nihil esse in vitā māgnō opere expetendum nisi laudem atque honestātem, in eā autem

All Famous Men have been Devoted to Letters.

VII. 15. Quaeret quispiam: 'Quid? illi ipsi summi viri, quōrum virtūtēs litteris prōditae sunt, istāne doctrinā, quam tū effers laudibus, ēruditi fuērunt?' Difficile est hōc dē 30 omnibus cōfirmāre, sed tamen est certē quod respondeam.

Ego multōs hominēs excellentī animō ac virtūte fuisse, et sine doctrinā nātūrae ipsius habitū prope divinō per sē ipsōs et moderātōs et gravis existisse, fateor: etiam illud adiungō, saepius ad laudem atque virtutem nātūram sine doctrinā quam sine nātūrā valuisse doctrinam. Atque idem ego contendō, cum ad nātūram eximiam atque inlūstre accesserit ratiō quaedam cōformātiōque doctrinae, tum illud nesciō quid praeclārū ac singulāre solēre exsistere. 5

16. Ex hōc esse hunc numerō, quem patrēs nostrī vidērunt, divinum hominem Africānum; ex hōc C. Laelium, L. Fūrium, moderātissimōs hominēs et continentissimōs; ex hōc fortissimum virum et illis temporibus doctissimum, M. Catōnem illum senem: quī profectō sī nihil ad percipiendam [colendam] virtutem litteris adiuvārentur, numquam sē ad eārum studium contulissent. Quod sī nōn hīc tantus fructus ostenderētur, et sī ex hīs studiis dēlectātiō sōla peterētur, tamen (ut opīnor) hanc animi adversiōnem hūmānissimā ac liberā- 10 lissimā iūdicārētis. Nam cēterae neque temporum sunt neque aetātum omnium neque locōrum: haec studia adulēcentiam alunt, senectutem oblectant, secundās rēs ōrnant, adversis perfugium ac sōlācium praebent, dēlectant domī, nōn impediunt foris, pernoctant nobiscum, peregrinantur, rūsticantur. 20

Ergō ille corporis mōtū tantum amōrem sibi conciliārat ā nobis omnibus: nōs animōrum incrēdibilis mōtūs celeritatemque ingeniōrum neglegēmus? 18. Quotiēns ego hunc Archiam 30

vidi, iudicēs, — ūtar enim vestrā benignitāte, quoniam mē in hōc novō genere dicendī tam diligenter attenditis, — quo-tiēns ego hunc vidī, cum litteram scripsisset nūllam, māgnū rem dicere, commūtātis verbis atque sententiis ! Quae vērō adcūrātē cōgitātēque scripsisset, ea sic vidī probārī, ut ad veterum scriptōrum laudem perveniret. Hunc ego nōn dili-

AEGAEUM MARE

SELECT LETTERS OF CICERO

I. (Att. 2. 10.)

A friendly and somewhat jocose note written by Cicero (B.C. 59) at Appii Forum while on his way from Rome to his villa at Formiæ. T. Pomponius Atticus, a wealthy Roman banker, was Cicero's most intimate friend. The letters to Atticus cover every subject in which Cicero felt an interest, from the fate of the republic to the choice of words in composition. Atticus belonged to the equestrian order—the "capitalist class" among the Romans. He was a highly cultivated man, of honorable character, and deeply interested in literature and philosophy. He had spent much time in Greece and was noted for his thorough acquaintance with the niceties of the Greek language—hence his surname "the Attic."

CICERO ATTICO SAL.

VOLŌ amēs meam cōstantiam: lūdōs Antī spectāre nōn placet; est enim ^{ἐπιθυμία καὶ ἀλλοτρίωσις} ὑποσολοιχόν, cum velim vitāre omnium deliciārum suspiciōnem, repente ^{ἀναφαίνεσθαι} ἀναφαίνεσθαι nōn sōlum dēlicātē, sed etiam ineptē peregrinantē: quā rē ūsque ad Nōnās Māiās tē in Formiānō exspectābō. Nunc fac ut sciam quō diē tē vīsūrī simus. Ab Appī Forō, hōrā quartā. Dederam aliam paulō ante ā Tribus Tabernīs.

II. (Att. 2. 21.)

This letter was written from Rome (B.C. 59) shortly before Cicero's banishment. Atticus, to whom it is addressed, was on his estate in Epirus. The so-called First Triumvirate was in power, and Cæsar had received the consulship as a part of the political bargain which he had made with Pompey and Crassus. His colleague Bibulus was in vain attempting to prevent him from carrying out his plans. Clodius, Cicero's bitterest enemy, was active, and Cicero was beginning to fear that Pompey's protection might not be sufficient. For the political situation and the causes of Cicero's banishment, see Life of Cicero, Introduction, pp. xix-xx.

Cicero expresses the fear that the course of the "Triumvirs" may lead to civil war. Pompey, by his compact with Cæsar, has alienated his own party. His popularity is waning. He has lately had a mortifying experience in a public assembly, where he vainly attempted to reply effectively to the attacks of Bibulus. Finally, Cicero expresses much anxiety as to his own prospects.

CICERO ATTICO SAL.

III. (Fam. 14. 1.)

A family letter, addressed to Cicero's wife Terentia, his daughter Tullia, and his son Marcus. It was written from Dyrrachium, B.C. 58, while Cicero was in exile. See Life of Cicero, Introduction, pp. ix-xxi.

TULLIUS TERENTIAE SUAE, TULLIOLAE SUAE, CICERONI SUO SALUTEM DICIT.

Et litteris multorum et sermōne omnium perfertur ad mē, incredibilem tuam virtutem et fortitudinem esse tēque nec animi neque corporis labōribus defatigari. Mē miserum! tē istā virtute, fidē, probitate, humanitate in tantās aerumnās propter mē incidisse! Tulliolamque nostram, ex quō patre tantās voluptatēs capiebat, ex eō tantōs percipere luctūs! Nam quid ego de Cicerōne dicam? quī cum primum sapere coepit, acerbissimōs dolōrēs miseriasque percipit. Quae sī, tū ut scribis, fātō facta putārem, ferrem paulō facilius, sed omnia sunt meā culpā commissa, quī ab eis mē amārī putābam, quī invidēbant, eōs nōn sequēbar, quī petēbant.

Quod sī nostris cōsiliis ūsī essēmus neque apud nōs tantum valuisset sermō aut stultōrum amicōrum aut improborum, beātissimī vīverēmus: nunc, quoniam spērāre nōs amici iubent, dabō operam, nē mea valētūdō tuō labōrī dēsit. Rēs quanta sit, intellegō, quantōque fuerit facilius manēre domi quam redire; sed tamen, sī omnis tribūnōs pl. habēmus, sī Lentulum tam studiōsum, quam vidētur, sī vērō etiam Pompeium et Caesarem, nōn est dēspērandum.

Dē familiā, quō modō placuisse scribis amicis, faciēmus; de locō, nunc quidem iam abiit pestilentia, sed quam diū fuit, mē nōn attigit. Plancius, homō officiōsissimus, mē cupit esse sēcūm et adhūc retinet. Ego volēbam locō magis dēsertō esse in Epīrō, quō neque Hispō veniret nec milites, sed adhūc Plancius mē retinet; spērat posse fierī, ut mēcūm in Italiam dēcēdat: quem ego diem sī viderō et sī in vestrum complexum vēnerō ac sī et vōs et mē ipsum recuperārō, satis māgnū mihi frūctū vidēbor percēpisse et vestrae pietātis et meae. Pisōnis hūmānitās, virtūs, amor in omnis nōs tantus est, ut nihil suprā possit: utinam ea rēs eī voluptātī sit! Glōriae quidem vidēō fore.

- 5 Dē Q. frātre nihil ego tē accūsāvī, sed vōs, cum praesertim tam paucī sītis, voluī esse quam coniūctissimōs. Quibus mē voluistī agere grātiās, ēgī et mē ā tē certiōrem factum esse scripsī. Quod ad mē, mea Terentia, scribis tē vicum vēnditūram, quid, obsecrō tē, — mē miserum! — quid futūrum est?
- 10 Et, sī nōs premet eadem fortūna, quid puerō miserō fiet? Nōn queō reliqua scribere — tanta vis lacrimārum est, — neque tē in eundem flētum addūcam.

- Tantum scribō: sī erunt in officiō amīci, pecunia nōn deērit; sī nōn erunt, tū efficere tuā pecūniā nōn poteris. Per fortūnās
- 15 miserās nostrās, vidē, nē puerum perditum perdāmus. Cui sī aliquid erit, nē egeat, mediocrī virtūte opus est et mediocrī fortūnā, ut cētera cōsequātur. Fac valeās et ad mē tabellariōs mittās, ut sciam, quid agātur et vōs quid agātis. Mihi omninō iam brevis exspectātiō est. Tulliolae et Cicerōnī
- 20 salūtem dic. Valēte. D. a. d. vi. K. Decemb. Dyrrachī.

Dyrrachium vēnī, quod et liberā civitās est et in mē officiōsa et proxima Itāliae; sed sī offendet mē locī celebritās, aliō mē cōferam, ad tē scribam.

IV. (Att. 3. 27.)

A hasty note, written at Dyrrachium, when Cicero's immediate recall from exile seemed unlikely, and begging Atticus to help him and to protect his family. The precise occasion of the letter is unknown; perhaps it was the affray of Jan. 25, B.C. 57, when Clodius by mob violence prevented the passing of a law recalling Cicero.

CICERO ATTICO SAL.

- Ex tuis litteris et ex rē ipsā nōs funditus perisse vidēō:
- 25 tē ōrō ut, quibus in rēbus tuī meī indigēbunt, nostris miseriis nē dēsīs; ego tē, ut scribis, cito vidēbō.

V. (Fam. I. 6.)

B.C. 56. Between this letter and the preceding came Cicero's triumphant return from exile (by a law passed Aug. 4, B.C. 57): see Life of Cicero, Introduction, p. xxi. The Lentulus to whom the letter is addressed (P. Cornelius Lentulus Spinther) was consul when Cicero was recalled. He was now proconsul in Cilicia. He had been eager for the office of restoring to the throne of Egypt Ptolemy XII (Auletes), father of Cleopatra, whose subjects had driven him out, but the business had dragged along at Rome, and Lentulus was mortified by having the commission withdrawn after it had passed the Senate. Ptolemy was restored by Gabinius, B.C. 55.

Cicero expresses his regret at the turn which the affair is taking, and declares that Lentulus has not been fairly treated. He refers to his own exile and finds some consolation for Lentulus in remembering how that ended in increased honor. He urges Gabinius to endure the attacks of his enemies with fortitude and dignity. In closing, Cicero promises to stand by his correspondent to the best of his power. The letter is full of good sense and kindly feeling skilfully expressed.

M. CICERO S. D. P. LENTULO PROCOS.

Quae gerantur, accipiēs ex Polliōne, qui omnibus negotiis nōn interfuit solum, sed praefuit. Mē in summō dolōre, quem in tuis rēbus capiō, māximē scilicet cōsōlātur spēs, quod valdē suspicor fore, ut infringātur hominū improbitās et cōsiliis tuorum amicōrum et ipsā diē, quae dēbilitat cōgitationēs et inimicōrum et prōditōrum tuorum. Facile secundō locō mē cōsōlātur recordātiō meōrum temporum, quōrum imāginem videō in rēbus tuis; nam etsi minōre in rē violātur tua dignitās quam mea adflicta est, tamen est tanta similitūdō, ut spēm tē mihi ignōscere, si ea nōn timuerim, quae nē tū quidem umquam timenda dūxistī. Sed praestā tē eum, qui mihi ā teneris, ut Graeci dicunt, unguiculis es cōgnitus: inlūstrābit, mihi crēde, tuam amplitudinē hominum iniūria. A mē omnia summa in tē studia officiaque exspectā; nōn fallam opiniōnem tuam.

VI. (Fam. 7. 1.)

Cicero has observed that his friend Marius did not attend the dedication of Pompey's Theatre and his temple of Venus Victrix, and writes to congratulate him on his superiority to vulgar fashion (see Letter I.). He expresses the hope that it was not ill health that kept his friend away and gives a lively criticism of the performances, which had offended him by their ostentation and brutality. The celebration here described took place in B.C. 55. It lasted for several days and eclipsed anything of the kind that the Romans had ever seen. The theatre, which stood in the Campus Martius, was the first Roman theatre to be built of stone and held forty thousand spectators.

Nothing is known of this C. Marius except what is contained in Cicero's four letters to him. He seems to have been a man of wealth and of cultivated tastes, whose delicate health forced him to live in retirement on his estates in the country.

M. CICERO S. D. M. MARIO.

Sī tē dolor aliquī corporis aut infirmitās valētūdinis tuae tenuit, quō minus ad lūdōs venirēs, fortūnae magis tribuō quam sapientiae tuae; sīn haec, quae cēteri mīrantur, contemnenda dūxistī et, cum per valētūdinem possēs, venīre
5 tamen nōluistī, utrumque laetor, et sine dolōre corporis tē fuisse et animō valuisse, cum ea, quae sine causā mirantur alii, neglēxeris; modo ut tibi cōstiterit fructus oti tui, quō quidem tibi perfrui mirificē licuit, cum essēs in istā amoenitāte paene sōlus relictus.

10 Neque tamen dubitō quin tū in illō cubiculō tuō, ex quō tibi Stabiānum perforāstī et patefēcistī Misēnum, per eōs diēs mātūtina tempora lēctiunculis cōsūmpseris, cum illi interea, qui tē istic reliquērunt, spectārent commūnis mīmōs sēmisorni. Reliquās vērō partis diēi tū cōsūmēbās eis 15 dēlectātiōnibus, quās tibi ipse ad arbitrium tuum comparārās; nōbis autem erant ea perpetienda, quae Sp. Maecius probāvisset.

Omninō, sī quaeris, lūdi adparātissimī, sed nōn tui stomachi; coniectūram enim faciō dē meō: nam primum honoris causā in scaenam redierant ei, quōs ego honōris causā dē scaenā dēcēsse arbitrābar; dēliciae vērō tuae, noster Aesōpus, eius modī fuit, ut ei dēsinere per omnis hominēs licēret. Is iūrāre cum coepisset, vōx eum dēfēcit in illō locō ‘sī sciēns fallō.’ Quid tibi ego alia nārrem? nōstī 5 enim reliquōs lūdōs, qui nē id quidem lepōris habuērunt, quod solent mediocrēs lūdī; adparātūs enim spectātiō tollē-bat omnem hilaritātem, quō quidem adparātū nōn dubitō quīn animō aequissimō carueris: quid enim dēlectātiōnis habent sēscentī mūli in Clytaemnēstra? aut in Equō Trō- 10 iānō crēterrārum tria mīlia? aut armātūra varia peditātūs et equitātūs in aliquā pūgnā? quae populārem admirātiōnem habuērunt, dēlectātiōnem tibi nūllam attulissent.

Quod sī tū per eōs diēs operam dedisti Prōtogenī tuō, dum modo is tibi quidvis potius quam ōrātiōnēs meās lēgerit, nē 15 tū haud paulō plūs quam quisquam nostrū dēlectātiōnis habuisti; nōn enim tē putō Graecōs aut Oscōs lūdōs dēsīderāsse, praesertim cum Oscōs lūdōs vel in senātū vestrō spectāre possis, Graecōs ita nōn amēs, ut nē ad villam quidem tuam viā Graecā ire soleās. Nam quid ego tē athlētās putem dēsiderāre, quī gladiātōrēs contempseris? In quibus ipse Pompēius cōnfītetur sē et operam et oleum perdidisse.

5 Reliquae sunt vēnātiōnēs bīnae, per diēs quīnque, māgnificae — nēmō negat, — sed quae potest hominī esse politō dēlectātiō, cum aut homō imbēcillus ā valentissimā bēstiā laniatur aut praeclāra bēstia vēnābulō trānsverberatur? quae tamen, sī videnda sunt, saepe vidisti; neque nōs, quī haec

15 Hīs ego tamen diēbus [lūdis scaenicis], nē forte videar tibi nōn modo beātus, sed liber omninō fuisse, dirūpi mē paene in iūdiciō Galli Canīnī, familiāris tuī. Quod sī tam facilem populum habērem, quam Aesōpus habuit, libenter meherculē artem dēsinerem tēcumque et cum similibus nostrī 25 meriti sunt, dēfendere.

Itaque quaerō causās omnis aliquandō vivendī arbitrātū meō, tēque et istam ratiōnem ōti tuī et laudō vehementer et probō, quodque nōs minus intervīsīs, hōc ferō animō aequiōre, quod, sī Rōmae essēs, tamen neque nōs lepōre tuō neque

Tū modo istam imbēcillitātem valētūdinis tuae sustentā et tuēre, ut facis, ut nostrās villās obīre et mēcum simul lecticulā concursāre possis. Haec ad tē plūribus verbis scripsi quam soleō, nōn ōtī abundantīā, sed amōris ergā tē, quod mē quādam epistulā subinvitārās, sī memoriā tenēs, ut ad tē aliquid eius modi scriberem, quō min⁹s tē praetermisisse lūdōs paenitēret. Quod sī adsecūtus sum, gaudeō; sin⁹ minus, hōc mē tamen cōsōlor, quod posthāc ad lūdōs veniēs nōsque vīsēs neque in epistulis relinquēs meis spem aliquam dēlectātiōnis tuae.

B.C. 55. Q. Ancharius was proconsul in Macedonia. Little is known of the young men for whom Cicero wrote this note, which is here given as a good specimen of a letter of introduction.

M. CICERO S. D. Q. ANCHARIO Q. F. PROCOS.

L. et C. VIII. (Fam. 7. 10.)

B.C. 54. C. Trebatius Testa was a jurisconsult of about thirty-five, whom Cicero had befriended. He was at this time with Cæsar in Gaul, whither Cicero had despatched him, in this same year, with a warm letter of recommendation, which had ensured him a favorable reception, for Cicero was now on good terms with Cæsar. Campaigning was not to the city lawyer's taste, and Cicero seems to have feared that he would return without making his fortune. His bantering letters were successful, however, and Trebatius came back in easy circumstances. He lived to become very distinguished as a jurist in the Augustan age. Horace addressed one of his Satires to him.

CICERO S. D. TREBATIO.

Lēgi tuās litterās, ex quibus intellēxi tē Caesarī nostrō valdē iūre cōsultum vidēri : est quod gaudeās tē in ista loca vēnisse, ubi aliquid sapere vidērē. Quod si in Britanniam quoque profectus essēs, profectō nēmō in illā tantā insulā
 5 peritior tē fuisset. Vērū tamen — rideāmus licet ; sum enim ā tē invitātus — subinvidēō tibi, ultrō tē etiam arcesitum ab eō, ad quem cēteri, nōn propter superbiam ēius, sed propter occupātiōnem, adspirāre nōn possunt. Sed tū in istā epistulā nihil mihi scripsisti dē tuis rēbus, quae 10 meherculē mihi nōn minōri cūrae sunt quam meae.

Valdē metuō nē frigeās in hibernīs ; quam ob rem caminō lūculentō utendum cēseō — idem Mūciō et Māniliō placēbat, — praesertim quī sagis nōn abundārēs : quamquam vōs nunc istic satis calēre audiō ; quō quidem nūntiō valdē meherculē 15 dē tē timueram. Sed tū in rē militārī multō es cautior quam in advocātiōnibus, quī neque in Ōceanō natāre volueris, studiōsissimus homō natandī, neque spectāre essedāriōs, quem antea nē andābatā quidem dēfraudāre poterāmus. Sed iam satis iocātī sumus.

Ego dē tē ad Caesarem quam diligenter scripserim, tūte scīs ; quam saepe, ego. Sed meherculē iam intermiseram, nē vidērer liberalissimī hominis meique amantissimī voluntātī ergā mē diffidere ; sed tamen eis litteris, quās proximē dedi, putāvī esse hominem commonendum. Id fēcī : quid 25 prōfēcerim, faciās mē velim certiōrem et simul dē tōtō statū tuō cōsiliisque omnibus ; scīre enim cupiō quid agās, quid exspectēs, quam longum istum tuum discessum ā nōbis futurum putēs.

Sic enim tibi persuādeās velim, ūnum mihi esse sōlātium, quā rē facilius possim patī tē esse sine nōbīs, sī tibi esse id ēmōlumentō sciam; sīn autem id nōn est, nihil duōbus nōbīs est stultius: mē, quī tē nōn Rōmam attraham, tē, quī nōn hūc advolēs. Ūnā meherculē nostra vel sevēra vel iocōsa congressiō plūris erit quam nōn modo hōstēs, sed etiam frātrēs nostri Haeduī. Quā rē omnibus dē rēbus fac ut quam primum sciam :

aut cōnsōlandō aut cōnsiliō aut rē iūverō.

IX. (Fam. 15. 11.)

This letter was written from Cilicia (B.C. 50) just before the Civil War broke out. Cicero had finished his provincial administration in Cilicia and was about to return home. He had hoped for a triumph, but in vain. The Senate voted him the honor of a supplicatio (or thanksgiving to the gods), and in this letter he thanks Marcellus, the consul, for exerting himself to procure him this tribute of respect. This was C. Marcellus, cousin of Cicero's friend M. Marcellus (in whose behalf the oration Pro M. Marcello was delivered).

M. CICERO IMP. S. D. C. MARCELLO COS.

Quantae cūrae tibi meus honōs fuerit et quam idem exstiteris cōsul in mē ōrnandō et amplificandō, quī fuerās semper cum parentibus tuīs et cum tōtā domō, etsī rēs ipsa loquēbātur, cōgnōvī tamen ex meōrum omnium litteris; itaque nihil est tantum, quod ego nōn tuā causā dēbeam factūrusque sim studiōsē ac libenter. γ Nam māgnī interest cui dēbeās; dēbere autem nēminī māluī quam tibi, cui mē cum studia commūnia, beneficia paterna tuaque iam ante coniūnxerant, tum accēdit meā quidem sententiā māximum vinculum, quod ita rem pūblicam geris atque gessistī, quā mihi cārius nihil est, ut, quantum tibi omnēs bonī dēbeant, quō minus tantundem ego ūnus dēbeam, nōn recūsem. Cicero had returned from his Cilician proconsulship in B.C. 50, reaching Brundisium Nov. 25. This letter was written Jan. 12, B.C. 49. He had not yet entered Rome, but was outside the walls, awaiting the decision of the Senate as to the triumph which he desired in recognition of his victories over certain mountaineers.

The letter is addressed to M. Tullius Tiro, Cicero's freedman and secretary, who had been with him in Asia and had fallen sick on the way back and was now at Patræ. Tiro was a highly accomplished man, and the relations between him and his patron were very honorable to both. He survived Cicero and is thought to have been active in collecting and arranging his works, particularly his correspondence.

The great Civil War had just broken out and Cicero was vacillating, while both Cæsar and Pompey made efforts to secure his support. He did not actually set out to join the Pompeian party until June of this year. See Life of Cicero, Introduction, p. xxiv.

XII. (Att. 8. 11. c.)

Written at Canusium in Apulia, Feb. 20, B.C. 49. Cæsar had overrun Picenum and had laid siege to Corfinium (February 13 or 14), which was held for Pompey by L. Domitius Ahenobarbus, Cato's brother-in-law.

Domitius sent to Pompey for aid, which Pompey refused, ordering Domitius to evacuate the city and come to his own headquarters at Luceria, in northern Apulia. At the same time Pompey determined to abandon Italy, sail to Epirus, and, when he had gathered a sufficient force, to return and resume hostilities. Accordingly he left Luceria and set out for Brundisium (Brindisi), the usual port of departure for Greece and the East.

The present letter was written at Canusium, on the way from Luceria to Brundisium. It is in reply to a letter from Formiæ (February 15) in which Cicero informs Pompey of recent events in that region, and expresses his opinion that the coast can be held, but adds that if Pompey wishes to concentrate all his forces, he is willing to join him at once. Before receiving this reply of Pompey's, Cicero had actually set out, but the activity of Cæsar cut off all access to Pompey, and he retired to Formiæ. See the next letter.

XIII. (Att. 8. 11. D.)

Written at Formiæ, Feb. 27, B.C. 49. In the first part of the letter Cicero explains his failure to join Pompey. He had started from Formiæ for Luceria. On reaching Teanum, in northern Campania, he heard that Cæsar was advancing rapidly toward Capua and had already reached Æsernia (in Samnium). He therefore went no farther than Cales (a short distance south-east of Teanum) and waited for news. There he received a copy of a letter from Pompey to the consul Lentulus, from which he inferred that it was Pompey's design to raise the siege of Corfinium (see introduction to Letter XII.). It was impossible for Cicero to go thither, since Cæsar was near that city, and he awaited developments in a state of intense anxiety. The next information was that Corfinium had surrendered to Cæsar (February 20) and that Pompey was fleeing to Brundisium, with Cæsar in hot pursuit. For Cicero to overtake Pompey was out of the question, to say nothing of the danger of being intercepted by Cæsar. Accordingly he retired to Formiæ and subsequently to his villa at Cumæ.

In the latter part of the letter, Cicero expresses his surprise and regret that Pompey had found it necessary to leave Italy, and defends his own course, which he was aware might appear vacillating and half-hearted. He had always hoped, he says, for a reconciliation between the two great rivals, but he now sees that there is no hope of that, and he closes with professions of fidelity to Pompey.

Pompey was besieged at Brundisium by Cæsar, but escaped by sea (March 15) with almost all his forces to Dyrrachium (formerly Epidamnus, in Illyria), where Cicero finally joined him in the late autumn or early winter.

Cum rēs in summā exspectātiōne esset, utrumque simul audivimus, et quae Corfinī ācta essent, et tē iter Brundi- 10 sium facere coepisse, cūmque nec mihi nec frātrī meō dubium esset quin Brundisium contenderēmus, ā multis qui ē Samniō Apūliāque veniēbant, admonitī sumus ut cavērēmus nē exciperēmur ā Caesare, quod is in eadem loca, quae nōs petēbāmus, profectus celerius etiam quam nōs possēmus, 15 eō, quō intenderet, ventūrus esset; quod cum ita esset, nec mihi nec frātrī meō nec cuiquam amīcōrum placuit committere, ut temeritās nostra nōn solum nōbis, sed etiam rei pūblīcae noceret, cum praesertim nōn dubitārēmus quin, si etiam tūtum nōbis iter fuisset, tē tamen iam cōsequi nōn possēmus. 20

Interim accēpimus tuās litterās Canusiō a. d. x. K. Mārtiās datās, quibus nōs hortāris ut celerius Brundisium veniāmus; quās cum accēpissēmus a. d. III. K. Eis autem, quibus nōn satis faciō, facile respondeō: neque enim ego amīcior C. Caesarī umquam fuī quam illī, neque illī amīciōrēs rei pūblicae quam ego. Hōc inter mē et illōs interest, quod, cum et illī cīvēs optimī sint et ego ab istā laude nōn absim, ego condiçionibus (quod idem tē intellēxeram velle) illī armis disceptārī māluerunt; quae quoniam ratiō vicit, perficiam profectō ut neque rēs pūblica civis ā mē animum neque tū amīci dēsiderēs.

B.C. 49. Pompey's flight left Cæsar master of Italy. He did not pursue Pompey, but, after settling affairs at Rome, went to Spain to suppress the Pompeians and their supporters in that quarter. On his way he sent the following letter (dated April 16) to Cicero, with whom he had already had a friendly conference on March 28.

Cæsar urges Cicero to take no active part with Pompey, assuring him that his best course is to keep aloof from the war. The tone of the letter is a singular combination of skilful suggestion and magnanimity. The respect in which Cæsar holds Cicero and the value that he ascribes to Cicero's influence are alike noteworthy.

XV. (Fam. 4. 1.)

The following letter was written toward the end of April, B.C. 49, shortly after Cæsar's departure for Spain. Cicero was living in retirement at his Cumæan villa. Cæsar had not molested him, and he could not help contrasting Cæsar's moderation with the violence of the Pompeians. Yet his conscience troubled him. He felt that his place was with Pompey, though he had come to see that the latter was no less a menace to the state than Cæsar. His hesitation lasted almost two months, for it was not until June 7 that he actually set sail for Dyrrachium.

The present letter dates from this interval of unrest. Cicero had visited Rome in January ; but he had not entered the city, for he was hoping to be allowed to celebrate a triumph. After his retirement to Cumæ, Sulpicius, who was now in the city, had expressed his regret at not meeting him. Cicero replies, offering to arrange for a conference, but despairing of the state. It is too late, he thinks, for them to accomplish anything. If they could have met immediately after his return from Cilicia, before hostilities had actually broken out, they might perhaps have retarded the fall of the republic. But now the whole world is at war, and the city of Rome itself is without lawful government. There is nothing to hope for ; scarcely anything to pray for. The interview took place at Cumæ, May 8, but came to nothing. Cicero describes Sulpicius (ad Att. x. 14) as very much alarmed.

Ser. Sulpicius Rufus, to whom the letter is addressed, was an eminent lawyer, Cicero's friend, and a man of the strictest integrity. Though a Pompeian, he was fond of peace, and readily became reconciled with Cæsar, who made him governor of the province of Achæa (B.C. 46). At the time of Cæsar's death he was in Rome. He was an important member of the Senatorial party in the events that followed, and died while on an embassy from the Senate to Antony (B.C. 43). Cicero's Ninth Philippic is a eulogy on Sulpicius.

M. CICERO S. D. SER. SULPICIO.

C. Trebātius, familiāris meus, ad mē scripsit tē ex sē quaesisse, quibus in locis essem molestēque tē ferre quod mē propter valētūdinem tuam, cum ad urbem accessissem, nōn vidissēs, et hōc tempore velle tē mēcum, sī propius accessissem, dē officiō utriusque nostrūm communicāre. 5 Utinam, Servi, salvīs rēbus — sic enim est dicendum — conloquī potuissēmus inter nōs ! Profectō aliquid opis occidenti rei publicae tulissēmus. Cōgnōram enim iam absēns tē haec mala multō ante prōvidentem dēfēnsōrem pācis et in cōsulātū tuō et post cōsulātum fuisse : ego autem, cum cōnsi- 10 lium tuum probārem et idem ipse sentīrem, nihil prōficiēbam ; sērō enim vēneram, sōlus eram, rūdīs esse vidēbar in causā, incideram in hominum pūgnandī cupidōrum insāniās.

Nunc, quoniam nihil iam vidēmur opitulārī posse rei publicae, sī quid est in quō nōbismet ipsis cōsulere possimus, 15 nōn ut aliquid ex pristinō statū nostrō retineāmus, sed ut quam honestissimē lūgeāmus, nēmō est omnium, quicum potius mihi quam tēcum communicandum putem ; nec enim clārissimōrum virōrum, quōrum similēs esse dēbēmus, exempla neque doctissimōrum, quōs semper coluisti, praecepta 20 tē fugiunt. Atque ipse antea ad tē scripsissem tē frūstrā in senātum sive potius in conventum senātōrum esse ventūrum, nī veritus essem nē eius animum offenderem, qui ā mē ut tē imitārer petēbat : cui quidem egomet, cum mē rogāret ut adessem in senātū, eadem omnia, quae ā tē dē pāce et dē 25 Hispāniīs dicta sunt, ostendī mē esse dictūrum.

Rēs vidēs quō modō sē habeat : orbem terrārum imperiīs distribūtis ārdere bellō ; urbem sine lēgibus, sine iūdiiciis, sine iūre, sine fidē relictam direptiōnī et incendiīs. Itaque mihi venīre in mentem nihil potest, nōn modo quod spērem, 30 sed vix iam quocū audeam optāre. Sīn autem tibi, hominī prūdētissimō, vidētur ūtile esse nōs conloquī, quamquam longius etiam cōgitābam ab urbe discēdere, cūius iam etiam nōmen invitū audiō, tamen propius accēdam, Trebātiōque sāret, idque ut faciās velim, aut, sī quem tuōrum fidēlium 5 volēs, ad mē mittās, nē aut tibi exīre ex urbe necesse sit aut mihi accēdere.

Ego tantum tibi tribuō quantum mihi fortasse adrogō, ut explōrātum habeam, quicquid nōs commūnī sententiā statu-erimus, id omnīs hominēs probātūrōs. Valē.

XVI. (Fam. 14. 10.)

Cæsar returned from Spain, victorious, in September, B.C. 49, and was appointed dictator. He soon proceeded against Pompey, who was still at Dyrrachium and had mustered a great army. In the first battle, near that city, Cæsar was defeated. He retired into Thessaly, followed, after a time, by Pompey. The Battle of Pharsalus (or Pharsalia), Aug. 9, B.C. 48, decided the Civil War. Pompey fled to Egypt, where he was murdered. Cicero was permitted by Cæsar to return to Italy, and remained for eleven months at Brundisium, where this letter was written July 9, B.C. 47. His wife Terentia was at Rome, but it was not safe for Cicero to go to the city until he had come to an understanding with Cæsar, who was in Asia. Cæsar arrived in Italy late in September of this year. He treated Cicero with great consideration, and the latter returned to Rome early in October.

The present letter and that which follows (Aug. 12, B.C. 47) are given as specimens of familiar domestic correspondence.

XIX. (Fam. 9. 14.)

P. Cornelius Dolabella (born about B.C. 69) married Cicero's daughter Tullia in B.C. 50, while her father was governor of Cilicia. When the Civil War broke out, in B.C. 49, Dolabella joined the party of Cæsar, whose favor he always retained. He fought at Pharsalia (B.C. 48) and, returning to Rome after the battle, was (like Clodius before him) adopted by a plebeian, that he might become a candidate for the tribunate. His turbulent actions in this position (B.C. 47) and his infamous private character caused a separation between him and Tullia, and in B.C. 46 they were formally divorced. Cicero, however, remained on friendly terms with him and even gave him lessons in oratory.

Cæsar designated Dolabella as one of the consuls for the year B.C. 44, and he assumed that office after the dictator's assassination. He negotiated with the conspirators, suppressed the mob that threatened them, and threw down a column erected in Cæsar's honor. This conduct was enthusiastically approved by Cicero, who had shown unmeasured delight at Cæsar's death, and who cherished vain hopes of a restored republic. The present letter of congratulation was written at Cicero's Pompeian villa, May 3, B.C. 44, about six weeks after the murder, and while Dolabella was on good terms with Brutus and Cassius. Cicero praises him without stint, congratulates himself on having had him as a pupil, and exhorts him to persevere in well-doing. But Dolabella soon veered round, made friends with Antony, and received Syria as his province. He committed suicide at Cæsarea, B.C. 43, to avoid falling into the hands of Cassius.

XX. (Fam. 12. 2.)

Julius Cæsar was assassinated on the Ides of March (March 15), B.C. 44, by a band of conspirators, headed by Marcus Junius Brutus and Caius Cassius Longinus. The conspirators fancied that if the dictator were out of the way the old constitution could be restored. But Cæsar's victory had made a republic forever impossible. Nor had the conspirators made any arrangements for a permanent government, or even for their own safety. The sole question was, who should succeed to the supreme power of the murdered dictator. And the only persons who had any real claims were Cæsar's surviving colleague in the consulship, Mark Antony, and the young Octavianus, Cæsar's grand-nephew, adopted son, and heir (afterwards the emperor Augustus).

Antony, who had come into possession of Cæsar's papers and estates, caused his "acts" to be legally confirmed, seized the public funds, abolished the office of dictator, and secured as large a share of authority as he could. He was a man of inordinate ambition, controlled only by an equally unbounded self-indulgence, utterly without principle or scruple, and (if we may trust the character of him drawn by Cicero) a monster of profligacy and crime. He had married for his third wife Fulvia, widow of Publius Clodius, and shared, with her, that tribune's vindictive hate of Cicero. His colleague was Dolabella (see p. 238), Cicero's son-in-law, who had assumed the consulship at Cæsar's death, on the ground that the latter had appointed him his successor in that office. Dolabella dallied with the conspirators, suppressed the violence of the mob that threatened them, and might have had some pretensions to the power, with the support of the aristocracy, but was easily out-generalled or bought off by Antony. Lepidus, who had a military command, and in whom the aristocracy had some hope, was also gained over by him. Octavianus, now twenty years old, hastened from Epirus to claim his inheritance and take part in the conflict which he saw approaching. He was a young man of precocious talent, of cool and wary temper, of ambition equal to Antony's, and of a political sagacity which, through his long life, seems never to have been at fault.

Neither of the two chief claimants was strong enough alone to be quite independent of the other. At first, however, they stood in the attitude of rivals, and in their antagonism there seemed still some hope for the republic. Each endeavored to secure the countenance of the Senate and to gain control over the public armies; and each succeeded in attaching to himself a considerable force, though neither was strong enough to hold the capital against the other.

Meanwhile Cicero, who at first hailed the death of Cæsar as the restoration of the republic, lost courage, and set out in July for Greece. Detained, however, by contrary winds, and receiving more favorable news from Rome, he returned to the city at the end of August, to find that all his hopes were idle. Still, he made an effort at conciliation, in a speech in the Senate, on the 2d of September. In this he replied severely to an attack made upon him by Antony the day before, but still took pains to leave the door open for a restoration of good-will. It was to no purpose. Antony replied, September 19, with such bitterness — directly charging Cicero with the murder of Clodius and of Cæsar — that it was clear he meant there should be no alternative but civil war. Cicero did not venture to answer him in the Senate; but replied, ten weeks later, in a pamphlet — by many regarded as his masterpiece — as bitter and uncompromising as the consul's attack. From its likeness in tone to the famous invectives of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon, this was called a "Philippic"; and the term has been extended to the entire series of fourteen orations against Antony, commencing with that of September 2, and ending with a triumphant speech of April 22, B.C. 53, with which Cicero's political career closed.

Brutus and Cassius had fled from Rome to escape mob violence after Cæsar's funeral. They remained for some time in Italy, making preparations for their departure for the East, where Brutus secured the province of Macedonia and Cassius that of Syria. The present letter was written from Rome in September, B.C. 44, to Cassius, who was in the neighborhood of Puteoli. It gives an account of Antony's speech of September 19, in reply to Cicero's First Philippic.

The winter was spent in attempts at negotiation, every stage illustrated by the running commentary of Cicero's Philippics. At last, in the spring of B.C. 43, diplomacy was at an end. Actual hostilities broke out first in Cisalpine Gaul, where Decimus Brutus—who had taken command of that province, according to Cæsar's last will—held the town of Mutina (Modena) against Antony. Octavianus, with his independent force, had also ranged himself on the side of the Senate. The consuls of that year, Aulus Hirtius and C. Vibius Pansa, had, after some hesitation, vigorously taken up the same cause. In April the consuls met Antony in two battles,—on the 15th at Bononia (Bologna), on the 27th near Mutina. In both he was defeated; but in the first Pansa was mortally wounded, and in the second Hirtius was killed. It was on the reception of the news of the victory at Bononia, while Pansa's fate was unknown, that Cicero, in the Senate, delivered his Fourteenth and last Philippic (April 22).

The rejoicings were soon at an end. Octavianus found that his own interests were best served by uniting with Antony against the Senate. These two—with Lepidus as a third triumvir—came easily into possession of supreme power. A remorseless proscription followed, in which the most illustrious victim was Cicero (Dec. 7, B.C. 43), sacrificed to Antony's resentment, the vindictive hate of Fulvia, and the cold ingratitude of Octavianus.

NOTES

ARGUMENT

[Omitted portions in brackets.]

CHAP. I. Exordium. Cicero's reasons for undertaking the case.— [2. Political aspect of the trial, showing (a) why others refused to undertake it; (b) why the jury ought to be especially cautious.] — Narratio. 6. Character of Sex. Roscius, the murdered man; his old feud with the Titi Roscii. — 7. The murder: circumstances pointing to Magnus as the procurer: Chrysogonus is informed, and a conspiracy made with him by Capito and Magnus. — 8. Proscription and sale of the property: Chrysogonus buys it up for a nominal sum: Sulla not implicated. Sex. Roscius is dispossessed. — 9. Amerians take up his cause and apply to Sulla, but are staved off by Capito, who was on the committee. — 10. Roscius flies to his friends at Rome: a trumped-up charge of parricide is brought. — 11. Commiseration of his client's position, with review of the circumstances. — 13. Partitio. Three things make against the defendant: (a) the charge; (b) the reckless villany of the two Titi Roscii; (c) influence of Chrysogonus. — Defensio. (I) 14. The crime is not in accordance with the character of the defendant: no motive can be shown: no enmity between father and son. — [15-17. His rustic employment: this is no evidence of ill-will. — 19. Alleged intention to disinherit: no proof. — 20. No case is made out: hence the accuser (Erucius) is attacked for bringing such a charge. — 21. The case rests only on the negligence of the court, and supposed friendlessness of the defendant. — 22. For the conspirators' manner changed when they found there would be a real defence. — Recapitulation:] no motive existed: necessity of direct evidence. — 23-26. Examples from other cases [and from literature]. Need of strongest proof shown by the severity of the penalty. — 27, 28. No means of committing the crime. — [29. Again: the accuser's presumption in trying to force a conviction. — (II) 30. Countercharge: T. Roscius the probable murderer: in his case there are motives. — 31. It was for his advantage. — 32. He was the murdered man's enemy. — 33. He had opportunities (compare the two cases). — 34. His acts after the murder: hasty message to Capito; his character. — 36. His testimony at the trial. — 37. Speedy announcement to Chrysogonus — apparently from the Roscii, for they have received the reward and possess the property. — 38, 39. Capito's perfidy to the committee. — 41. Magnus refuses the slaves for question. — 42. Influence of Chrysogonus.] — (III) 43. Chrysogonus the purchaser: the sale was illegal, for proscriptions had ceased. — 44-47. Lawlessness and insolence of Chrysogonus: Sulla is artfully excused: the cause of the nobility not involved. — 48. Chrysogonus' cause not that of the nobility. — 49. Responsibility of the attack on Chrysogonus is Cicero's: Roscius asks only his life. — Peroratio. 50-51. Simulated appeal to Chrysogonus, to stir sympathy of the jury: incidental mention of the powerful friends of the defendant. — 52, 53. But if Chrysogonus does not spare him, he appeals confidently to the court.

I. EXORDIUM (§§ 1-4)

SECTS. 1-4. Cicero undertakes the defence in default of any abler advocate.

By this skilfully modest opening, Cicero not only explains why he, an obscure young advocate, appears in so important a case, but he indicates on which side are the sympathies of the best citizens, and he contrives at the same time to suggest the odds against which Roscius and his counsel must contend. Thus the remarks are not merely personal and introductory, but form an essential part of the argument. A famous modern example of similar art is Erskine's Exordium in his Defence of Lord George Gordon on a charge of high treason.

PAGE 2. LINE 1. (SECT. 1.) ego: not emphatic itself, but expressed merely to set off vos, which is. The Latin is so fond of putting pronouns in contrast that one is often (as here) expressed for the mere purpose of antithesis. — iudices: not judges, but rather jurors. They were persons selected by law to try facts (under the presidency of a praetor or iudex quaestionis), and varied in number from a single one to fifty or more. They were originally selected from the Senators, but C. Gracchus had transferred the right to sit as iudices to the Equites (or wealthy middle class). Sulla, whose reforms went into operation B.C. 80, had restored this right to the Senators, and the present case was the first to occur under the new system. It was brought in the Quaestio inter sicarios (or court for the trial of murder), under the presidency of the praetor M. Fannius. — quid sit quod, why it is that. — quod (causal) . . . surrexerim expresses a fact, and takes the subj. of informal ind. disc. as depending on the indirect question quid sit : § 341, b (); cf. B. 323; G. 663, 1; H. 529, ii (652); H. & B.

2 2 summi oratores, homines nobilissimi: notice the chiasmic order; § 344, f (); B. 350, 11, c; G. 682; H. 562 (666, 2); H. & B.

. — cum sedeant: cum has a slight concessive force: render by when or while; though would be too strong. Since Sulla's victory had restored the aristocracy to power, it might be expected that men of rank (nobilissimi) would have courage to come forward and defend Roscius: their presence showed their sympathies, though they did not rise to defend him. — ego: emphatic, as opposed to the orators and men of rank.

2 3 potissimum, rather than any other. — aetate: Cicero was but twenty-six years old.

2 4 sim: in direct disc. this might be either subj. to indicate the character of Cicero, or indic. to denote a mere fact about him; here it is necessarily subj. as being an integral part of the clause quod . . . surrexerim; § 342 (); B. 324, 1; G. 663, 1; H. 529, ii (652, 1); H. & B. , which is itself dependent on quid sit. — sedeant, sit still, instead of rising to speak: subj. of integral part, dependent on sim comparandus.

2 5 hi: strongly demonstrative; accompanied, perhaps, with a gesture, — these men here. — iniuriam, injustice. — novo scelere (abl. of means), the strange (almost = unheard of) charge (of parricide).

2 6 oportere: this verb is always impersonal; its subject here is the clause iniuriam defendi. — defendi, defendere: see Vocab.; supply but (suggested in Latin by the close juxtaposition of the two inf.s.) before defendere in translating.

2 7 iniquitatem temporum, i.e. the disturbed state of politics, while the wounds of the Civil War were still fresh. — ita fit: the subject is the clause ut adsint, etc. — adsint, they attend: opposed to taceant; the position of taceant indicates this antithesis. The friends of any party to a suit attended court to give him the advantage of their presence and influence (cf. Cæs. B.G. i. 4). Such friends were technically called advocati, but they did not, like the modern advocate, speak in court.

2 8 officium, duty, arising from their relations to the murdered man, who had stood in the relation of hospitium (see hospes in Vocab.) with some of the highest families.

2 10 (SECT. 2.) audacissimus, i.e. is it that I have more effrontery than any of the rest?

2 11 ne . . . quidem, not . . . either, enclosing, as usual, the emphatic word: § 151, e (); B. 151, e; G. 448, N.²; H. 569, iii, 2; H. & B. — istius, i.e. that which is in your thoughts: § 102, c (); B. 87; G. 306; H. 450 (507, 3); H. & B.

2 12 sim, conjunctivus modestiae: § 311, b (); cf. B. 280, 2; G. 257, 1; H. 486, i (556); H. & B. — aliis, dat.: § 229 (); B. 180, 2, d; G. 345; H. 386, 2 (429, 2); H. & B. — praereptam: prae- gives here the force of getting the start of others in snatching it (cf. pre-vent, from praevenio). — me: so emphatic as to throw igitur out of its usual place.

2 14 reciperem, undertake a case offered; suscipere is to take up of one's own motion.

2 15 amplitudo, position, from birth, wealth, office, or the like.

2 16 id quod, a thing which: § 200, e (); G. 614, R.²; H. 445, 7 (399, 6); H. & B.

2 17 dixisset, an integral part of putaretur. — putaretur: apodosis of fecisset; § 308 (); B. 304, 1; G. 597; H. 510 (579); H. & B.

, while the whole from si verbum through putaret is the apodosis of si quis dixisset in l. 14. Translate, if any one had spoken, in case he had made any allusion to politics, he would, etc.

3 1 (SECT. 3.) ego, etc., but in MY case, even if I, etc. — etiamsi . . . dixerō, . . . poterit: § 307, c (); B. 264, a; G. 244, 2; H. 508, 2 (574, 2); H. & B.

3 2 similiter, in like manner, i.e. as if a man of rank had spoken. — exire, etc., i.e. this speech will not be quoted and talked over, and hence any allusions to politics which it may contain will not seem more significant than they really are.

3 3 emānare: not to be confounded with mānēre. — deinde quod: the second reason, corresponding to quia in l. 14. — ceterorum, opposed to ego in l. 6, below. — dictum: noun, limited by ceterorum; dicto (l. 5) is also a noun, though modified by an adv.; § 207, c (); G. 437, R.; H. & B.

3 5 concedi, impersonal: § 230 (); B. 187, ii, b; G. 217; H. 384, 5 (426, 3); H. & B.

3 7 nondum . . . accessi, I have not yet gone into public life, i.e. become candidate for any office. Cicero began his political career five years later, with the quaestorship.

3 8 tametsi, although, in its so-called "corrective" use, — the concession coming after the general statement, as a kind of limitation of it. — ignoscendi ratio, the idea of pardon. The vaguely general word ratio with the gen. of the gerund expresses little more than our word pardon alone. The Latin, being poor in abstract words, has to resort to such shifts as this to supply their place. So cognoscendi consuetudo, the habit of judicial investigation, is almost equivalent to judicial investigation simply. This was a bold speech to make under the rule of the tyrant Sulla.

3 11 (SECT. 4.) accedit, there is in addition: used as a kind of passive of addo. — illa, this, i.e. the following (a common use of this pronoun). — quod, that: § 333 (); B. 299, I, b; G. 525, I; H. 540, iv (588, 3); H. & B. . — a ceteris, from the others, i.e. the nobles.

3 12 petitum sit: for subjunc. see § 334, g and N. (); G. 457, 2, N.; H. p. 267, footnote ¹. — ut dicerent [causam], subst. clause of purpose, subj. of petitum sit: § 331, h (); G. 546; H. 499, 3 (565, 2), H. & B. . — dicere causam is the technical expression for defending a case. — ut . . . arbitrarentur: a clause of result, dependent on ita petitum sit: § 319 and R. (); B. 284, I; G. 552; H. 500 and N.¹ (591); H. & B. . — utrumvis, either [course, i.e. to speak or be silent], at their choice; lit. either [of the two] you please. — salvo officio (abl. of manner), without a breach of duty.

3 13 arbitrarentur: imperf. following petitum sit, which is regarded as a secondary tense since it represents the perf. indic.; § 287, a (); B. 268, I; G. 511, N.²; H. 495, i (546); H. & B. . — a me autem, etc., lit. but from ME, etc. (opposed to a ceteris above). The emphasis may be preserved by changing the construction in English: but as for myself, men have urged it [i.e. that I should undertake the defence of Roscius] on me who, etc. — ei, men; here used simply as a correlative to qui, and not in a really demonstrative sense. The reference is of course to the noble friends of Roscius.

3 16 debeam, subj. of characteristic: § 320 (); B. 283, I; G. 631, 2; H. 503, i (591, I); H. & B. . — his: emphatic, summing up the reasons he has given for undertaking the case; ego, emphatic as opposed to the others present.

3 17 patronus, advocate, the word advocati having a different meaning (see note on p. 2, l. 7, above). — unus, as the one man.

3 20 uti ne: in purpose clauses the double form is often used instead of ne alone. — desertus, etc.: observe that Cicero not only attempts to win the sympathies of the jurors for the helplessness of his client, but that he also contrives to suggest, in advance of the formal statement of facts, that there is a combination or conspiracy of some kind against young Roscius. The same thing was insinuated in sect. 1 by the use of conflatam (l. 6).

II. NARRATIO (§§ 5-19)

Sects. 5-9. Character of the murdered man, Sex. Roscius the elder. His political affiliations. His old feud with T. Roscius Capito and T. Roscius Magnus. The murder. Suspicion points to Magnus as procurer of the crime and to Capito as at least accessory after the fact.

3 22 (SECT. 5.) huiusce, of my client. — munciceps Amerinus, a citizen of the free town Ameria. The Latin uses an adj. of possession when it can, often where the English prefers of: § 190 (); B. 354, 4; G. 362, R.¹; H. 395, N.²; H. & B. ; cf. Æneid, ii. 55, 487, etc.

3 25 hospitiis, guest-friendships. The hospitium was a relation between individuals of different cities or states, at a time when there were no international relations; it included the duties of hospitality and protection, was transmitted from father to son, and was vouched for by a ticket (tessera). Roscius not only had this formal relation to several of the greatest families at Rome, but he was also on intimate terms of personal friendship with them. Hence, in line 27, domesticus . . . consuetudo, intercourse and companionship [with them] in their homes.

3 28 honestatis . . . gratiā (so honoris causā, sect. 17), with all honor. It seems to have been held a liberty to mention the name of any person of quality in a public address; hence such mention is generally accompanied by a form of compliment. Cf. the modern parliamentary usage of referring to members of a deliberative body by the names of their offices (or as the "gentleman from —") rather than by their own names.

3 29 hoc solum, i.e. the hospitium.

3 30 domestici, of his own house.

3 31 ereptum possident, have seized and now hold: § 292, R. (); G. 664, R.¹; H. 549, 5 (639); H. & B. ; possidere does not signify to own, in the modern sense, but merely to hold or occupy. — innocentis, i.e. fili: in Latin any noun may be left out if there is an adj. or a part. to determine its case.

3 32 defenditur: Cicero skilfully contrives to keep before the jury the fact that Roscius has powerful friends who desire his acquittal.

3 32 (SECT. 6.) This section tells of Roscius's political associations. He was a favorer of the nobility (Sulla's party), and therefore had nothing to fear from the proscription instituted by Sulla after his final victory over Marius. These facts are skilfully brought in at this point so as to prepare the jurors for the statement, made later, that the insertion of Roscius's name in the proscription list after his murder was manifestly part of a plot to get possession of his estate. They also prepare for the exoneration of Sulla (in sect. 12), since it was not to be supposed that he would have consented to the proscription of so zealous a member of his own party. Throughout the oration Cicero is under the necessity of holding the dictator blameless. — cum, when, introducing the general situation; tum, the particular circumstance. — omni tempore, at all times, as opposed to the time of the Civil War: notice the emphatic position.

3 33 hoc tumultu, this last disturbance (euphemistic): i.e. the final scenes of the Civil War of Marius and Sulla, which Cicero will not call bellum. — cum, at a time when.

4 1 in discrimen veniret (subj. of characteristic, not simply cum temporal), was at stake.

4 3 rectum: render no more than right (thus giving the emphasis of its position).

4 4 se pugnare, simply to fight: object of putabat, while rectum is an adj. in pred. apposition with se pugnare. — honestate, honestissimus refer respectively to the rank and dignity of these great families, and the credit which his connection with them gave him in his own neighborhood.

4 5 victoria, i.e. of Sulla's party.

4 6 proscriberentur: the number of the proscribed in Sulla's time was 4700. "Whoever killed one of these outlaws was not only exempt from punishment, like an executioner duly fulfilling his office, but also obtained for the execution a compensation of 12,000 denarii (nearly $2400); any one, on the contrary, who befriended an outlaw, even his nearest relative, was liable to the severest punishment. The property of the proscribed was forfeited to the state, like the spoil of an enemy; their children and grandchildren were excluded from a political career, and yet, so far as of senatorial rank, were bound to undertake their share of senatorial burdens." (Mommsen.) At first only the names of those who had justly forfeited their lives were proscribed; afterwards it became easy for friends and favorites of the dictator (like Chrysogonus, attacked in this oration) to put upon the list the names of innocent men, and even of men already dead, so as to work confiscation of their property. Sulla's proscriptions nominally ceased June 1, B.C. 81.

4 8 erat Romae: this shows that he had no reason to fear the proscription. — frequens: § 191 (); B. 239; G. 325, R.⁶; H. 443 (497); H. & B.

4 9 ut . . . videretur, clause of result.

4 12 (SECT. 7.) inimicitiae, causes or occasions of enmity; for the plur., see § 75, c (); B. 55, 4, c; G. 204, N.⁵; H. 130, 2 (138, 2); H. & B.

. By this sentence Cicero suggests to the jury what he afterwards develops in the argument: that a motive for the murder existed in the case of the Titi Roscii. He thus prepares the way for the elaborate counter-charge (omitted in this book) made against these two later in the oration. Observe the emphasis that comes from the juxtaposition of sects. 6 and 7: Roscius had nothing to fear from the proscription. He had ENEMIES, however,—the very men who are now prosecuting his son.

4 13 accusatorum: prosecutions might be brought by private persons (as by Cicero against Verres). In this instance these two Roscii were associated with Erucius as prosecutors.

4 14 huiusce, of my client (see note on sect. 9, below).

4 16 neque enim, nor, you see. — iniuriā: used adverbially. — isti, i.e. of the party of prosecution. Iste, the so-called “demonstrative of the second person,” is regularly used of one’s opponent in a suit or debate, as hic is used of one’s client. See § 102, a, c (); B. 87; G. 306; H. 450 (505); H. & B.

4 17 Capitoni: § 231, b (); B. 190, 1; G. 349, R.⁵; H. 387, N.¹ (430, 1); H. & B. : following cognomen.

4 19 palmarum, prizes: sarcastically spoken, as if his many acts of violence had been victories in gladiatorial fights. — nobilis, famous (as of artists, actors, etc.). — hic, the one here present (Magnus); eum, referring to the one just mentioned, the absent one (Capito).

4 20 lanistam (in app. with eum) carries out the sarcastic figure of palmarum and gladiator.

4 21 quod sciam, so far as I know, sc. id; adv. acc., § 240, b (); B. 283, 5; G. 331, 1; H. 378, 2 (416); H. & B. : i.e. he must have been a mere apprentice (tiro) at the trade: “this is the first of his actual murders that I know of.” For mood, see § 320, d (); B. 283, 2; G. 627, R.¹; H. 503, i, N.¹ (591, 3); H. & B. . (Passages in brackets in the text are thought to be spurious insertions.)

4 23 (SECT. 8.) hic, this man (with a gesture), i.e. here at my side (my client); iste, that man, i.e. there on the accusers’ bench (Magnus).

4 24–26 cum . . . esset: parenthetical (repeating, in greater detail, the clause that precedes).

Observe that Cicero remarks (as it were, casually) that in thus devoting himself to a rural life, the younger Roscius was obeying his father’s wishes. This prepares the way for his subsequent assertion (sect. 23) that there was no ill-will between father and son, — an important matter in the question of motive. It also anticipates the answer given in sect. 22 to the argument that the defendant was a rude, boorish fellow, of gloomy and sullen disposition, and therefore likely to have committed murder. The effectiveness of a forensic discourse depends in great part on the skill with which the mind of the hearer is prepared, by such apparently insignificant remarks, for a definite assertion or argument that is to follow.

4 26 iste: T. Roscius Magnus; the repetition of the words frequens, etc., emphasizes the suggestion that he was likeliest to be the murderer.

4 27 Palacinas: the reading is uncertain, and the place unknown.

4 30 hunc, i.e. my client. — iudicatote: § 269, d (); B. 281, 1, a; G. 268, 2; H. 487, 2 (560, 4); H. & B. . The second or longer form of the imperative is regular where the action is not to be performed immediately, especially when a future appears in protasis: § 307, d (); B. 302, 4; G. 595; H. 508, 4; H. & B. .

5 1 (SECT. 9.) Ameriam nuntiat, brings the news to Ameria; domum, two lines below, shows the same construction.

5 3 T. Capitonis: Cicero thus insinuates that Magnus and Capito had planned the murder together. The speed with which the one sent the news to the other was, of course, suspicious, as well as the further proceedings described in sects. 10 and 11, including the proscription and the sale of the property.

5 4 inimici: cf. the same word in lines 32, 33. The reason for thus harping on the inimicitiae mentioned in sect. 7, above, must be evident. — horam primam: the night from sunset to sunrise was divided into twelve hours.

5 6 nocturnis: the travelling would be more difficult and slow in the night, though the night hours would be longer than the day hours in the late autumn or winter, when the murder is thought to have been committed. — cisiis: the plural form shows that there were relays of carriages (Fig. 1).

Sects. 10-12. The two Titi Roscii communicate with Chrysgon, who has the name of the murdered man inserted in the proscription list and buys his confiscated estates for a nominal sum. Capito receives three farms for his share. Magnus is made the agent of Chrysogonus to take possession of the others. No blame attaches to Sulla, who was ignorant of what was going on.

5 10 (SECT. 10.) quadriduo, etc.: we should say within four days from the time when.

5 11 in castra: the idea of motion, vividly conceived, suggests the acc. of place as well as person; we should say TO Chrysogonus IN Sulla's camp AT V.; § 259, h (); B. 182, 2, b; G. 337, R.⁶; H. & B. .

— Volaterras. "Here some of the Etruscans and of those proscribed by Sulla made a stand and were blockaded for two years, and then surrendered on terms." — defertur: this word implies an intentional conveying of the information, as if in the manner of a formal report.

5 12 fundos, different estates, i.e. lands or buildings, whether in town or country.

5 13 trīs = tres: the acc. termination in -īs remained in this and a few other words for a considerable time after the form in -ēs became the more common. — Tiberim: the nearness of the river facilitated both irrigation and transportation, and so added much to the value of the estates.

5 15 splendidus, eminent: the regular complimentary epithet of equites and persons of similar rank; gratiosus, in favor: referring to his relations with great families, which Cicero takes care never to let the jury forget. — nullo negotio, without any difficulty.

5 18 ne teneam, not to detain you: a purpose clause after some verb of saying, etc., which is regularly omitted, as in English; § 317, c (); B. 282, 4; G. 688; H. 499, 2, N. (568, 4); H. & B. .

5 19 (SECT. 11.) cum, etc.: the proscriptions nominally ceased June 1, B.C. 81; the murder was committed some months after this date (see below, sect. 39).

5 21 iam, already (with reference to time preceding); nunc would refer only to the moment itself. — defunctos, rid of, sc. esse.

5 22 studiosissimi, devoted to the party of Sulla, and so not likely to be proscribed (see note to sect. 6, p. 3, l. 32, above).

5 23 vel (emphasizing the superlative), the very, etc.

5 24 propria, as his own.

5 25 iste, yonder, on the accusers' benches. — nomine, i.e. as agent.

5 26 impetum facit, makes a raid upon, implying violence, as of a charge in battle.

5 27 duobus milibus nummum, i.e. about $100: § 378 (); H. 647 (757); H. & B. : they are estimated in ch. ii to have been worth $300,000.

5 28 (SECT. 12.) Since Chrysogonus was a favorite of Sulla's, Cicero had to be careful not to appear to attack the Dictator. Hence he interrupts the story of the plot to express his certainty that Sulla had not known what was going on and to excuse him on the ground of the pressure of public business.

5 29 certo scio, I feel sure: § 151, c (). — neque enim: negative of et enim, introducing a point obvious or indisputable, for, you see, it is not surprising (cf. p. 4, l. 16, above); § 156, d (). — mirum [est] is the apodosis and si . . . animadvertat (p. 6, l. 4) is the protasis. mirum [est] is the main clause of the whole period; the long parenthesis (lines 29-4) consists of a string of causal clauses with cum (which may be translated either when or since).

5 30 praeparet, must provide for.

6 1 pacis . . . rationem, i.e. the ordering of the new constitution.

6 4 si aliquid (more emphatic than si quid) non animadvertat, if there is SOMETHING he does not notice: protasis with mirum [est], above; § 333, b, R. (); G. 542, N.¹; H. & B. .

6 6 ut . . . moliantur (clause of purpose), that as soon as he turns away his eyes they may get up something of this sort. — despexerit, perf. subj.: § 342 (); B. 324, 1; G. 663, 1; H. 529, ii (652); H. & B. ; for fut. perf., § 286, end (); B. 269, 1, b; G. 514; H. 496, ii (541, 2); H. & B. .

6 7 huc accedit, add to this. Notice the difference of order and consequently of emphasis between huc accedit (add to THIS) here, and accedit illa (there is in ADDITION) in sect. 4, above. — quamvis felix sit: § 313, a (); B. 309, 1; G. 606; H. 515, iii (586, ii); H. & B. , however fortunate he may be. Sulla was so impressed with his own good fortune, that he assumed the agnomen Felix, which implied, according to ancient notions, the peculiar favor of the gods. (See Manil., sect. 47.) Fig. 2 shows a coin of Faustus Sulla's with this inscription.

6 9 familia, household of slaves and dependants (see under sect. 35). — qui habeat, as to have: § 320, a (); B. 283, 2; G. 631, 2; H. 500, i (589, ii); H. & B. .

6 10 libertum: a freedman still remained attached to his former master (now his patronus), often lived in his family, did various services for him, and stood towards him in relation somewhat like that of a son under the patria potestas. Towards others he was a libertinus, fully free, but with some political disqualifications; towards his former master he was a libertus.

Sects. 13–17. The younger Roscius is ejected from his estates by T. Roscius Magnus. The Amerians send delegates to Sulla to protest; but the purpose of the delegation is frustrated by Capito. Roscius the younger takes refuge with Cæcilia, a friend of his father's at Rome.

6 13 (SECT. 13.) qui . . . solvisset, though he had not yet, etc.: § 320, e (); B. 283, 3; G. 634; H. 515, iii (593, 2); H. & B. . — omnia . . . iusta, all the due rites of burial: these ended with a sacrifice on the ninth day (novemdialia) after the death or burial; paterno funeri is indir. obj. of solvisset (lit. had not yet paid all due rites to his father's funeral).

6 16 pecuniae, property. — qui (causal) . . . fuisset, since he had been, etc.: § 320, e (); B. 283, 3; G. 633; H. 517 (592); H. & B. .

6 17 ut fit, as generally happens. — insolens, here wasteful and extravagant. — domum suam: § 258, b, N.¹ (); G. 337, R.³; H. 380, 2 (419); H. & B. .

6 18 auferebat, began to, etc.: § 277, c (); B. 259, 2; G. 233; H. 469, 1 (535, 3); H. & B. .

6 21 urbe tota: § 258, f, 2 (); B. 228, 1, b; G. 388; H. 425, ii, 2 (455, 1); H. & B. .

6 22 (SECT. 14.) This section, though in form a mere statement of the reasons that prompted the Amerians to send a delegation to Sulla, is in fact and intent a brief and powerful recapitulation of the history of the conspiracy. Its effect is to strengthen the impression which Cicero has from the first been trying to produce: namely, that the murder was the first act in the plot of the two Titi Roscii, the latest act being the false charge brought against his client.

6 25 iter, right of way, such as was usually reserved in case of the sale of any estate on which was a family burial-place; by the proscription this right was cut off.

6 26 bonorum emptio: the technical term denoting purchase at public sale. — furta refers to clam; rapinae to palam, above.

6 30 (SECT. 15.) decurionum: these constituted the municipal senate or city council. The decem primi were a standing executive committee of the town, to whom, in this instance, an unusual piece of business was intrusted. If the delegates had been a special committee appointed expressly to report the case to Sulla, Capito, one of the conspirators, would hardly have been chosen a member.

7 1 qui vir, what sort of man, i.e. especially in his political principles. The delegates were apparently to certify to the fact that Roscius had been of Sulla's party.

7 4 ut . . . velit, that he will consent.—decretum: the decree was here read to the court, but it has not been preserved. Its reading must have produced considerable effect. It was not only important testimony to the innocence of the younger Roscius, but it was introduced by Cicero at such a point in the case as to repeat and confirm the summary of the plot just given.

7 6 id quod, as (see note on p. 2, l. 16, above).

7 9 nobilis, acc. plur. — ab eis qui peterent, to beg of them: § 317, 2 (); B. 282, 2; G. 630; H. 497, i (590); H. & B. ; eis refers to the decem primi. — ne . . . adirent, obj. of peterent.

7 10 vellent: § 336, 2 (); B. 314, 1; G. 508, 2; H. 524 (643); H. & B. .

7 11 pollicerentur, same constr. as peterent.

7 13 (SECT. 16.) antiqui, of the old stamp, i.e. plain, honest men. — ex sua natura, after their own nature. — ceteros, subj. of esse understood, depending on fingerent, imagined. — confirmaret, assured them.

7 17 re inorata, without having stated their case: the primary meaning of oro implies not entreaty, but statement or argument (cf. orātor). — reverterunt: the active form of this verb is found only in the tenses of the perfect stem; otherwise it is deponent.

7 18 isti, i.e. Chrysogonus and Capito.

7 19 lentius, less energetically. (On account of the natural correlation of opposites, it is often convenient to translate adjectives and adverbs by the negative of their contraries.) — nihil agere, i.e. refrain from action. — deludere, [and thus] to make fools of the Amerians (by having rendered their whole embassy ineffectual).

7 20 id quod, etc., as we may easily infer: this point is an inference, not, like the rest, an attested fact.

7 21 neque, and . . . not, the negative qualifying posse: and judge that they can no longer, etc. In English the negative is placed near the verb; in Latin it is attracted by the connective, and so often stands at the beginning of the clause.

7 22 domino incolumi (abl. abs.), so long as the owner was alive.

7 23 (SECT. 17.) hic, my client. — de, in accordance with. — cognatorum, blood-relations: these were accustomed to hold a consilium, or formal deliberation, on important family affairs, — like the modern “family council” of the French.

7 24 Caeciliam: see sect. 50.

7 25 honoris causā: cf. note on sect. 5, p. 3, l. 28, above. — quā . . . plurimum, whose especial friendship his father had enjoyed.

7 27 id quod, etc., i.e. she showed on this occasion (nunc) the generous traits which everybody supposed she possessed. — quasi . . . causa, as if to serve as a model.

7 28 antiqui officii, old-fashioned fidelity; officium means the performance of duties as well as the duties themselves.

7 29 domo: § 258, a (); B. 229, 1, b; G. 390, 2; H. 412, ii, 1 (462, 4); H. & B. , without the prep., while bonis requires ex.

8 2 vivus . . . referretur: § 332, a (); B. 297, 2; G. 553, 1; H. 501, i (571, 1); H. & B. , brought alive to trial, rather than murdered and put on the proscription list. This implies that their first plan was to treat him as they had treated his father, but that, frustrated in this, they have trumped up a charge of parricide against him.

Sects. 18–19. The conspirators bring a charge of parricide against the younger Roscius, thinking that, for political reasons, nobody will dare defend him. The condition of Roscius is indeed miserable, but an advocate, however inefficient, has been found in the person of the speaker.

8 7 (SECT. 18.) ut . . . deferrent, compararent, pugnarent: subst. clauses of purpose in app. with consilium, l. 6; § 331, headnote (); cf. B. 295; G. 546, N.²; H. 499, 3 (564); H. & B. . — nomen deferrent, i.e. lay a formal charge before the president of the proper court. — de parricidio: § 220, b, 2 (); G. 378, R.²; H. 410, ii, 3 (456, 3); H. & B. .

8 8 veterem, old in the trade: the reign of terror through which Rome had just passed had given ample practice.

8 9 de ea re, etc., in a case in which, etc. — posset, clause of purpose, rather than result (but the two constructions approach each other so closely that it is not always possible to distinguish between them). — subesset, subjunc. of characteristic. — suspicio, i.e. should be able, from his skill as a prosecutor, to make a show of a case even when there was no ground for suspicion against the accused.

8 10 crimine (abl. of means), on the charge itself, i.e. by any strength in the incriminating evidence. — poterant: indicative as being their reason given by Cicero on his own authority; § 321 (); B. 286, 1; G. 540;

H. 516, i (588, 1); H. & B. . — tempore (opposed to crimine), the circumstances of the times (i.e. partly the generally disturbed condition of the state, partly the fact that the courts were now first reopened, after their reorganization by Sulla).

8 11 loqui: historical infin.; § 275 (); B. 335; G. 647; H. 536, 1 (610); H. & B. . — tam diu, i.e. during the Civil War.

8 12 eum, the man (i.e. any one). — oportere, was sure to. — qui primus: this was the first case that came before the Quaestio inter Sicarios.

8 13 adductus esset: for fut. perf. of direct disc. — huic: the emphatic position may be rendered by in his case.

8 14 gratiam, favor or influence, i.e. with Sulla.

8 16 fore ut, etc.: the usual periphrasis for the fut. infin. pass.; the supine with iri is rare. — nullo negotio: cf. sect. 10, p. 5, l. 15. — tolle-retur: cf. de medio tolli, sect. 10.

8 17 nullo: for the abl. of nemo, which is never used. — atque adeo, or rather.

8 18 quem: the antecedent is eum below.

8 19 iugulandum, i.e. for judicial murder: § 294, d (); B. 337. 7, b, 2; G. 430; H. 544, N.² (622); H. & B. .

8 20 (SECT. 19.) querar, deliberative subj.; § 268 (); B. 277; G. 265; H. 484, v (559, 4); H. & B. . — unde, where, lit. whence: the Latin conceives the speaker as proceeding from some point, whereas the English represents him as beginning at some point. — potissimum (superl. of potius, as if rather), best (rather than anywhere else); cf. sect. 1, l. 3.

8 23 summam potestatem, unlimited power (i.e. with respect to rendering a verdict). — fidem, i.e. the protection required by good faith.

8 24 pater, etc.: these nominatives are in no grammatical construction, but are used to enumerate in a vivid way the crimes of the conspirators afterwards referred to by his (l. 26): cf. § 292, a (); B. 337, 5; G. 664, R.²; H. 549, N.² (636, 4); H. & B. .

8 25 infesta, imperilled.

8 27 nefariis, abl. of instr. after cumulant: the idea in Latin is that of making a heap of what already exists, by means of other things piled on it (hence acc. and abl.); but translate, upon these they heap up other infamies.

8 29 huiusce (emphatic instead of eius): translate by his own. — condicionem, terms (or dilemma): as containing the idea of a bargain, it is followed by ut; § 331, d (); cf. B. 295, 4; G. 546, N.²; H. 498, i (564, iii); H. & B. .

8 30 cervices: this word is used by early writers in the plural only.

9 1 insutus in culeum: the old punishment for a parricide was to be "beaten with blood-red rods, then sewed into a sack, with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and thrown into the deep sea" (see below, sect. 29).

9 2 patronos: Cicero's modesty will not allow him to call himself a patronus (cf. note on p. 3, l. 17). — qui . . . dicat, purpose-clause: the antecedent is the subj. of deest, below.

III. PARTITIO (§ 20)

9 6 (SECT. 20.) This contains the formal statement of the technical partitio or division of the matter of the defence (defensio) into its parts or heads. These are distinguished as the charge (crimen) brought by Eru- cius, the effrontery (audacia) of the two Titi Roscii, and the illegal influ- ence (potentia) of Chrysogonus. The charge Cicero says it is his business to refute. If he can do this he trusts to the jury to see that the effrontery of the Roscii and the influence exercised by Chrysogonus shall not injure his client. Sects. 20–35 are given to disproving the crimen, chs. xxx.–xli. (omitted in this edition) to opposing the audacia of the Roscii by bringing a counter-accusation (especially against Capito, who is directly charged with the murder), and sects. 36–46 to disposing of Chrysogonus.

9 6 quantum, so far as (adverbial acc.).

9 12 quid igitur est? how then?

9 17 primo quoque tempore, the very first opportunity (i.e. that which the present case affords) since the violence and disorder of the Civil War. — exstinguere debetis: the courts had just been restored by Sulla after a long interval of lawlessness, and the case of Roscius was the first to come before the reorganized Quaestio inter Sicarios. There was a general feel- ing that the courts ought to do something at once, — a feeling that might well be prejudicial to the defendant even though he was innocent. To re- move this prejudice Cicero (1) suggests that the conspirators relied on it in bringing their iniquitous charge (sect. 18: ita loqui homines . . . esset), and (2) shows that an acquittal, by rebuking the effrontery and violence of men like Chrysogonus and his confederates, would do much to restore law and order.

IV. DEFENSIO (§§ 21–47)

Sects. 21–23. The guilt of the defendant is antecedently improb- able. His character does not suit the crime. No motive has been shown. The alleged ill-will between the father and the son has not been proved and is unlikely.

9 20 (SECT. 21.) eius modi quo uno maleficio, of such a kind, that in this one crime (rel. clause of result).

9 22 voltu, by a look.

9 24 *si . . . postulare*t, . . . cogebant, would compel it if the case required: see § 308, b (); cf. B. 304, 3; G. 597, R.³; H. 511¹ (581, 1); H. & B. (); iura cogebant is equivalent to a verb of necessity, and hence the imperf. indic. in the apodosis appears with the imperf. subj. in the protasis.

9 27 auditum sit, a general condition; subj. because integral part of the result clause.

9 28 tu (emphatic), you, a professional prosecutor.

9 29 censes: the word used to express deliberate judgment, after discussion or the like.

9 30 mores, character, as resulting from habits of life; naturam, natural disposition.

10 2 tu: emphatic, as opposed to the general run of accusers. Cicero is here using the famous "argument from probability," a favorite with ancient orators and rhetoricians from the fifth century B.C. "For example, if a physically weak man be accused of an assault, he is to ask the jury, 'Is it probable that a weakling like me should have attacked anybody?' while if the accused is a strong man he is to claim that it is improbable that he should have committed an assault in a case where his strength was sure to be used as a presumption against him."

10 4 (SECT. 22.) Here the "argument from probability" is very skillfully carried out. In sect. 22 Cicero draws such a contrast between the nature of the crime and the character of the defendant as to appeal powerfully to the imagination of the jury as well as to their reason. Describing briefly and vividly the three types of men who might be recognized as likely to commit such a murder (the weak-minded stripling led astray by evil companions, the hardened cut-throat, the ruined debauchee), he points to the life and character of Roscius as having nothing in common with any of these. This leads up at once to the question of motive: if Roscius' character was so little suited to the crime, the motive must have been extraordinarily powerful; but no motive at all has been shown (sect. 23).

10 4 patrem, etc.: to preserve the emphasis we may render a PAR-RICIDE has been committed by Sex. Roscius. — qui homo? what sort of man (is it who has committed such a crime)?

10 5 adolescentulus: the diminutive suggests a weak stripling led astray (inductus); the defendant was, in fact, a man of forty. — nequam, with hominibus.

10 6 maior: anomalous for the more usual plus or amplius; § 247, c (); B. 217, 3; G. 311, R.⁴; H. 417, 1, N.² (471, 4); H. & B. .
— vetus (emphatic), old (in the sense of the English derivative inveterate).
— videlicet, no doubt, of course.

10 10 de luxuria: for constr. see note on de parricidio (p. 8, l. 7).

10 12 cuiquam: words in italics are not in the manuscripts, but are supplied by modern scholars (from conjecture) as being necessary to the construction or the sense.

10 14 obiecit: the accuser had made it a point in his argument that the defendant was of a morose temper, shunning all society and burying himself in the country. Cicero deftly turns these assertions to the advantage of his client.

10 15 officio, sense of duty, and consequent discharge of it; especially used with reference to filial duty (pietas).

10 16 (SECT. 23.) In ancient trials, as at present, it was particularly important to show a motive in order to secure a conviction for murder. Erucius had alleged two motives, — ill-feeling between father and son, and intended disinheritance. In this section (and in the two chapters that follow, omitted in this edition) Cicero disposes of the former; in ch. xix. (also omitted) he argues that there is no evidence that the elder Roscius meant to disinherit his son. In chs. xx. and xxi. (omitted) he goes on to say that the prosecutor has shown no case and to inveigh against him for bringing a baseless charge.

10 19 iustam, sufficient or well-grounded.

10 20 illud, this (referring forward to the inf. clause following), i.e. the point previously treated; hoc, the new point now introduced.

10 22 odio . . . parenti: § 233, a (); B. 191, 2; G. 356; H. 390, i (433); H. & B. .

10 23 eodem, to the same point (as that treated in the preceding section).

10 25 displiceret, was disliked by.

10 26 qui odisset, in that he hated (according to their argument): see § 341, d (); B. 323; G. 628; H. 528, 1 (649, i); H. & B. .

10 27 constantissimus (opposed to amens), most steady-minded ("level-headed").

10 28 illud refers forward (as usual) to causam fuisse. — iam, by this time.

Sects. 24-30. Recapitulation. Erucius had to show not only a strong motive, but, in the case of so unnatural a crime, to bring the clearest testimony as to the facts — where, how, by whose means, when the murder was committed. A recent case of acquittal (sect. 26), even against strong circumstantial evidence, since absolute proof is needed to establish such a charge. Enormity of the crime, as shown by the severity of the legal punishment (sects. 28-29). Yet Erucius has no evidence to offer — he has not even established a plausible motive.

11 3 quod, referring to id in l. 5: cf. in English, “whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.”

11 4 iam prope cotidiana, which have now come to be an almost everyday affair.

11 5 quae, etc.: the question which is referred to in quod . . . quaeritur.

11 7 convenisse . . . videntur, seem to have converged upon one spot and to agree together: the phrase inter se may express any sort of reciprocal relation; § 196 f (); B. 245, 1; G. 221; H. 448, N. (502, 1); H. & B.

11 10 ingenio, talent (i.e. power in putting the case). — cum, not only.

11 12 ostendatur: § 331, f, R. (); B. 295, 6 and 8; G. 535, R.²; H. 502, 1 (564, ii, 1); H. & B.

11 14 (SECT. 25.) sint, exist. — exstent: cf. note on ostendatur, above. — expressa vestigia, distinct footprints.

11 15 ratione, manner, i.e. the whole plan of the act.

11 19 suspicionibus: governed by reclamitat, which, on account of its meaning, takes an indir. obj.

11 21 esse, that there should be, etc.

11 23 feras: notice the emphatic position. The emphasis may be expressed in English either by changing the verb to the passive (in order to keep feras at the beginning of the clause) or by turning thus: even in the case of wild beasts, etc.

11 25 (SECT. 26.) As an example of what cogent proof is required to overcome the presumption against the possibility of so unnatural a crime as parricide, Cicero cites a recent case in which strong circumstantial evidence was held insufficient. — ita, so very.

11 26 non obscurum, respectable.

11 29 servus: here used as adj.; § 188, d (); G. 288, R.; H. 441, 3 (495, 3); H. & B.

12 1 pertineret, subj. of characteristic. — id aetatis: § 240, b ();

B. 185, 2; G. 336, N.²; H. 378, 2 (416, 2); H. & B. , i.e. too old for the sound sleep of childhood. — autem, on the other hand. — propter, near by.

12 4 neutrumne sensisse, the idea that, etc.: infin. of exclam., § 274 (); B. 334; G. 534; H. 539, iii (616, 3); H. & B. ; cf. Æneid, i. 37.

12 5 potissimum, of all others; cf. sect. I, l. 3.

12 7 (SECT. 27.) porro . . . conveniret, could naturally fall (really in the same constr. as pertineret, l. I, above).

12 9 iudicio (abl. of means), on the trial (more lit. by the court).

12 13 potuisset, subj. of characteristic (in dir. disc. potuerit).

12 14 non modo . . . possunt, not only cannot, etc.: § 149 e (); B. 343, 2, a; G. 482, R.¹; H. 552, 2 (656, 3); H. & B. ; the verb is sufficiently negated by ne.

12 16 (SECT. 28.) quo . . . eo, the less . . . the more.

12 18 multis = many other (implied in the generalizing cum, not only, followed by tum, but also).

12 19 armis, abl. of specification.

12 20 tum, but also (correlative with cum in l. 17). — vel: in the emphasizing use, to strengthen maxime; § 93 b (); B. 240, 3; G. 303; H. 444, 3.

12 21 singulare, special (lit. unique).

12 22 sapientiam, acc. of exclamation.

12 23 rerum natura, the universe, represented by air (caelum), fire (solem), water, and earth, the elements "from which all things are said to be produced" (omnia nata esse, l. 26).

12 25 ademerint, subord. clause in ind. disc.

12 27 dicuntur: for mood, see § 342, a (); cf. B. 314, 4; G. 629, R., b; H. 529, ii, N.¹ (652, 1); H. & B. .

12 27 (SECT. 29.) obicere, cast forth to. — ne bestiis . . . uteremur, lest we should find the very beasts more savage (immanioribus, in predicate apposition).

12 28 attigissent, subj. of integral part.

12 29 sic nudos, naked as they were.

12 30 ipsum, even that. — violata, defiled.

12 31 expiari: sea water, as well as running water, was regarded as having a ceremonially purifying quality, — an opinion prevailing in various religions, and found in the forms of ablution, baptism, and the like. — putantur: for mood cf. dicuntur, l. 27, above. — tam . . . volgare, so cheap or so common.

12 32 cuius . . . reliquerint, clause of result.—etenim, i.e. it needs no argument to show, etc.

13 2 eiectis, to castaways.—ita, in such a way.

13 8 (SECT. 30.) talibus viris, “to this intelligent jury.”—ne causam quidem, not even a motive (to say nothing of evidence of guilt).

13 9 emptores, the purchasers (of the confiscated property), i.e. men having the strongest interest in his conviction, with Chrysogonus himself as their presiding officer.

13 11 venisses, you should have come: § 266, e (); G. 272, 3; H. 483, 2, N. (558, 1); H. & B. —utrum . . . an, i.e. which is it—the nature of the question or the character of the court [another compliment to the jury]—that you do not see?

13 14 ne . . . quidem: § 209, a, 1 (); B. 347, 2; G. 445; H. 553, 2 (656, 2); H. & B. .

Sects. 31–35. Roscius had not only no motive to commit the crime, but no means of committing it. Erucius is challenged to tell how Roscius could himself have killed his father or could have procured his death through others.

13 16 (SECT. 31.) esto, well then (to quit that point).—causam proferre, to allege a motive.

13 17 vicisse debeo, I ought to have now gained the case, i.e. by my past argument; ought to have conquered (in the past) would be vincere debui: § 288, a (); B. 270, 2; G. 280, b, N.³; H. 537, 1 (618, 2); H. & B. .

13 18 in alia causa, in another case: an implied condition of which concederem is the apodosis; § 310, a (); B. 305, 1; G. 600, 1; H. 507, N.⁷ (583); H. & B. .

13 19 qua re, why; quo modo, how. Cicero contends that he is not obliged to discuss the manner of the murder, since Erucius has not raised that point, and has not even been able to assign a motive. His own position in the argument is so strong, however, that, he says, he can afford to concede a point by waiving the question of motive and allowing Erucius to argue the case on the basis of the means by which Roscius could have committed the crime. This is of course a rhetorical device to introduce one of Cicero’s strongest arguments. It cannot be proved that it was even possible for Roscius to kill his father under the circumstances. By calling for the details of the murder Cicero shows that none can be produced. The whole passage serves also as an effective preparation for the counter-charge (omitted in this edition), in which it is shown that Sex. Roscius Magnus had not only a motive, but every opportunity.

13 21 sic, i.e. I will deal with you on these terms. — meo loco, in my place, i.e. in the time allotted to the defence; this was determined for each party by the prætor.

13 22 respondendi, i.e. at the end of a question; interpellandi, i.e. in the middle of any question, to answer a part of it; interrogandi, i.e. by asking questions in his turn.

13 24 (SECT. 32.) ipse percussit, did he strike the fatal blow himself?

13 25 ipsum, sc. percussisse. — per alios: for abl. of means, when persons are intended, see § 246, b (); G. 401; H. 4 15, 1, N.¹ (468, 3); H. & B.

13 27 indidemne Ameriā, from America there? (lit. the same place). — hosce sicarios, these cut-throats here of ours.

13 30 convenit, i.e. to bargain for the murder.

13 32 unde, i.e. on whom did he draw for the money? All such banking business being in a manner public, the sum could be traced, as by cheques and the like in modern times.

14 1 caput, fountain-head.

14 2 tibi, dat. instead of poss. gen.: § 235, a (); B. 181, 1, N.; G. 350, 1; H. 384, 4, N.² (425, 4, N.); H. & B. — veniat, with facito (fac) for simple imperat.: § 269, g (); cf. G. 553, 1; cf. H. 489, 2 (561, 2); H. & B. The fut. form of the imperat. is used, because the accuser is bidden to reflect on the point raised, so that there is a distinct reference to future time: § 269, d (); B. 281, 1, a; G. 268, 2; H. 487, 2 (560, 4); H. & B.

14 3 agrestem, boorish (see next clause).

14 5 in oppido constitisse, stayed in any town; oppidum is distinguished both from urbs, the great city, and vicus, a country village; it would be a place of some society and cultivation.

14 6 (SECT. 33.) qua in re, on this point. — praetereo, etc.: an excellent example of the rhetorical device called praeteritio ("omission"). The speaker dwells upon the point while pretending to pass it over in silence.

14 7 poterat, might, i.e. if I chose to use it: § 311, c (); B. 304, 3; G. 597, R.³; H. 511, 1, N.³ (583); H. & B.

14 8 victu arido, dry or meagre way of living. — inculta, uncouth.

14 10 possis, potential subj., § 311, a (); B. 280; G. 257, 1; H. 485 (552); H. & B.

14 11 in urbe (emphatic), i.e. not in the country, where Roscius was 14 12 exsistat, erumpat, dependent on necesse est. — erumpat, burst forth: a strong word is used on account of audacia, reckless daring.

14 13 autem, on the other hand.

14 14 agrestem: see note on l. 3. — parsimoniae, thrift (in a good sense).

14 16 (SECT. 34.) missa facio, I let that pass (missa agreeing with haec, obj. of facio); such phrases are often used colloquially or with emphasis, for the simple verb: § 292, d (); G. 537; H. & B. .
— illud quaero, THIS is what I want to know.

14 17 per quos: these words are the interrogative expression with which the clause grammatically begins; is homo is put first for emphasis.

14 20 suspiciose, i.e. so as to look suspicious. — in his rebus, but in THESE circumstances, i.e. those in our case (emphatic position). — suspicio . . . culpam: i.e. in so clear a case I will not ask Erucius for proof of guilt; if he can show any suspicious circumstance, it shall suffice.

14 22 credo, I suppose: ironical, as usual when parenthetical.

14 27 causa dicitur, the defendant is on trial (a technical term: lit. the case is argued, i.e. by the defendant).

14 28 (SECT. 35.) admiserit: § 332, a (); B. 297, 2; G. 553, 4; H. 501, i, 1 (571, 1); H. & B.

14 29 quod, that.

14 30 quod: the antecedent is id (p. 15, l. 1); the clause ut . . . polliceatur is in apposition with quod.

15 1 quaestionem, question in the technical sense, i.e. examination by torture, the regular legal way of examining slaves. An accused person could, of his own accord, offer his slaves for that purpose (polliceri): in this case Roscius had lost his slaves, and so was deprived of that privilege.

15 2 unus puer, as much as a single slave.

15 3 minister, i.e. to wait upon him. — familia: this word, in its primary meaning, properly embraced the entire body of free persons, clients, and slaves, under the patriarchal rule of the paterfamilias. In time, the meaning was divided, applying either (1) to the family proper — the paterfamilias, with his wife, children, etc.; or (2) to a body (or gang) of slaves. The latter is the meaning here.

15 4 Scipio, Metelle: these were, probably, P. Scipio Nasica, father of Metellus Scipio (a leader on Pompey's side in the Civil War), and his cousin, Q. Metellus Nepos, brother of Cæcilia (sect. 50), and father of the Celer and Nepos referred to in the orations against Catiline.

15 5 advocatis, called in (as friends of the accused); agentibus, taking active part. The demand seems to have been formal, and these friends were present to attest it.

15 7 meministisne: -ne = nonne; § 210, d (); B. 162, 2, c: G. 454, N.⁵; H. & B. . — T. Roscium, i.e. Magnus.

15 8 sectantur, are in the train of.

15 10 quid facitis: up to this point Cicero appears to be merely accounting for the fact (which might have made against his case) that the younger Roscius had not offered his slaves for examination. With this abrupt question he shows the true bearing of the refusal of Magnus, retorting suddenly the countercharge, which he carries out in a chapter here omitted. The effect on a jury of such an appeal as Dubitare, etc., must have been very great.

Sects. 36–42. The sale of the property of the elder Roscius was illegal and his proscription in every way irregular. For this act Chrysogonus is to be blamed, not Sulla, for Sulla was necessarily so much occupied with affairs of state that details of this kind escaped his attention.

15 17 (SECT. 36.) aureum: the Greek name Chrysogonus means gold-born.

15 18 latuit: because his was the only name that appeared.

15 22 alii quoque, i.e. other purchasers of confiscated estates.

15 23 ut mihi, etc., i.e. I have no occasion to say anything of the purchasers of confiscated estates in general, for this case, by its atrocity, is taken out of the common category (haec enim causa, etc., l. 24, below).

15 24 sectorum: these were the purchasers of confiscated property in the lump, who afterwards divided it (seco) to sell again in detail.

15 28 (SECT. 37.) venierunt, from vēneo, not vēnio.

15 30 si enim haec, for if such remarks, etc., i.e. if I may be allowed to speak freely.

15 31 tantus homo, such a great person: a hint that more important men than he had suffered. In fact, all the really eminent victims of the Civil War had perished before the proscription.

16 2 qui (adv.), how?

16 3 Valeria: the law by which Sulla was made perpetual dictator and invested with absolute power of life and death (B.C. 82); it was proposed by L. Valerius Flaccus as interrex. Laws were designated by the gentile name of their proposer; all laws, for example, carried by L. Cornelius Sulla were known as Leges Corneliae. — Cornelia: this appears to have been enacted some time after the lex Valeria, in order to regulate the details of the proscription. Cicero's ignorance of the law is no doubt affected. — novi, I know the thing or person; scio, I know the fact: I am not acquainted with the law, and do not know which it is.

16 6 proscripti sunt: the indic. must mean those already proscribed when the law was passed. Future cases of proscription would have been referred to by the subj. or fut. perf. (see Verr. ii. chs. xli, xlii).

16 7 in . . . praesidiis, among the armed forces, etc.

16 8 dum, so long as: § 276, e, N. (); G. 569; H. 519, i (603, i); H. & B.

16 12 veteres, those of the regular code; novas, those of the Sullan revolution. — occisum esse, indir. disc. with constat; the subj. acc. is omitted.

16 14 (SECT. 38.) in eum, i.e. Sulla. Here it is necessary for the orator to proceed with great caution: even if not himself present, Sulla would watch sharply the first case before his own criminal court.

16 15 ab initio, from the beginning of this trial (see sect. 12); omni tempore, throughout his whole career.

16 17 ut ementiretur, . . . passus non sit, clauses in appos. with haec omnia: for the change of tense, see § 279, d (); H. & B.

16 18 apud adversarios, in the enemy's ranks (= in praesidiis, above).

16 21 postea: the passage referred to appears to have been lost out of the oration, probably in the gap in ch. xlv. The scholiast represents Chrysogonus as saying that he had used the property in building a villa at Veii.

16 24 (SECT. 39.) Kalendas Iunias, acc., in the same constr. as diem.

16 26 tabulas: confiscated property belonged to the state, and public records of its seizure and sale were, of course, kept. — nulla, not at all: § 191 (); B. 239; G. 325, R.⁶; H. 457, 3 (513, 3); H. & B.

16 27 redierunt = relata sunt. — facetius, more cleverly: in the case supposed, the pretended proscription would never have occurred and the property would have been taken without even the forms of law.

16 30 ante tempus, too early, i.e. before it is time to raise so trivial a question as that of a title to property (Roscius is now on trial for his life).

16 32 reduviam curem (proverbial), treat a sore finger, i.e. in a case of life and death I deal only with some trifling ailment. For mood see § 320, e (); B. 283, 3; G. 586; H. 517 (592); H. & B.

17 1 non rationem ducit, he does not take account (a mercantile phrase).

17 5 (SECT. 40.) partim pro me, partly in my own name. To avoid entangling the case of his client with politics, Cicero makes himself responsible for everything that may have a political bearing; he was a well-known partisan of the nobility and could afford to speak freely.

17 7 quae-que: not from quisque. — ad omnis pertinere, concerns all.

17 8 sensu ac dolore, feeling and pain, i.e. painful feeling (so-called hendiadys).

17 11 iam, with the fut., presently.

17 12 (SECT. 41.) ego, opposed to Roscio.

17 17 diem: fem.; § 73 (); B. 53; G. 64; H. 123 (135); H. & B. — prae-finita, fixed in advance, as the limit (finio).

17 19 patronum, i.e. Sulla. See note on libertum, p. 6, l. 10.

17 20 conferre, throw the responsibility for. — egerit, will effect, fut. perf. for fut.: § 281, R. (); G. 244; H. 473 (540); H. & B.

17 22 imprudente: cf. p. 5, l. 28.

17 23 (SECT. 42.) placet, do I like? i.e. do I think it right? — imprudentiā, want of foresight.

17 24 etenim si, etc. (the apod. is quid miramur, p. 18, l. 1). The comparison that follows is perhaps somewhat strained; but it accords with the habits of thought of the ancients, to whom the powers of a supreme ruler appeared in a manner divine. (Cf. the language used of Caesar in the Oration for Marcellus.) The tone in which kings were addressed in modern literature until very recent times may be compared (see, e.g., Bacon's dedication of his Advancement of Learning to James I.).

17 29 pernicii, for perniciiei: § 74, a (); B. 52, 2; G. 63, N.¹; H. 121, 1 (134, 2 and 3); H. & B. — vi ipsa . . . rerum, by the very violence of the elements, — the agents or powers which he has to control.

18 1 cum is causal, but may be translated when.

18 4 nisi, here as often (more commonly with forte or vero) introducing a reductio ad absurdum: § 315, b N. (); G. 591, R.⁴; H. & B. — quod, pron.: the anteced. is id.

18 5 possit, adepta sit, informal indirect disc., as expressing the thought of the person surprised: § 341 (); B. 323; G. 662; H. 528 (649, i); H. & B. — si . . . sit, clause with mirum: § 333 R. (); G. 542, N.¹; H. & B.

Sects. 43-46. In thus attacking Chrysogonus, Cicero is not assailing the cause of the nobility. On the contrary, that cause is honored by resistance to him. His insolence and power are unbearable. It was not to advance such slaves as he that Sulla fought and conquered.

19 1 (SECT. 43.) vereor: for emphat. position cf. credo, p. 2, l. 1. — imperitior: § 93, a (); B. 240, 1; G. 297, 2; H. 444, 1 (498); H. & B. .

19 2 tametsi, and yet. — meo iure, with perfect right (as belonging to that party); iure alone would mean justly; meo limits it to the speaker's own case. The passage that follows is interesting, as showing the way in which Cicero regarded the general principles at stake in the Civil War, and the excesses of the victorious party.

19 6 pro mea, etc., to the extent of my poor and feeble ability.

19 7 ut componeretur, that reconciliation should be made: a clause of result in appos. with id: § 332 and head-note (); B. 297 and 3; G. 557; H. 501, iii (571, 4); H. & B. .

19 8 qui vicerunt, who did (in fact) conquer: the subj. here would mean, whatever party might conquer: § 342, N. (); G. 629, R.; H. 529, ii, N.¹ (652, 1); H. & B. .

19 9 humilitatem, not merely low rank, but meanness and vulgarity; dignitate, personal worth, from birth and services; amplitudine, rank or position — prominence in the state. With all his arrogance, blood-thirstiness, and narrow conservatism, Sulla was, in fact, the representative of orderly government against anarchy and mob-law.

19 10 perditi civis erat (pred. gen.), it was the part of a bad citizen: § 214, d (); B. 198, 3; G. 366; H. 401, 402 (439); H. & B. .

19 11 quibus incolumibus (abl. abs.), by whose safety.

19 12 retineretur would be preserved: fut. cond., the protasis being quibus incolumibus: § 307, f (); G. 596, 2; H. 507, N.⁷ (575, 9); H. & B. . — quae, i.e. the reinstating of the nobility.

19 15 felicitate: see note on p. 6, l. 7.

19 17 (SECT. 44.) quod animadversum est (impers.) in eos, that those have been punished (a euphemistic expression for the proscription). Observe the chiasitic order of ideas: (a) the punishment; (b) the persons on whom it was inflicted; (*b*₁) the persons rewarded; (*a*₁) the reward.

19 20 quae, referring to both the punishment and the reward just spoken of.

19 21 in eo studio partium, in favor of that party: studium is the regular word for siding with a particular party.

19 22 id actum est, this was the object. — idcirco, antecedent to the purpose clause. — ut . . . facerent, purpose clause in appos. with id.

19 23 postremi, the lowest (in class or character).

19 25 tum vero: here the apodosis begins.

19 28 nihil horum est, none of these things is true (i.e. is the fact).

19 29 ornabitur. Nothing can exceed the skill with which, throughout this oration, Cicero keeps before the minds of the jury the distinction between the great cause of Sulla and the nobility and the unscrupulous greed of some of Sulla's partisans. His continual allusions to his client's hereditary friendships with the aristocracy have this end, among others, in view.

19 30 (SECT. 45.) male: to speak ill is to utter abuse or calumny.

20 1 causam communicare, identify their cause with that of, etc.

20 3 equestrem, referring to the struggle for the iudicia and the extensive sympathy of the equites with the party of Marius. Cf. note to Verr. sect. I.

20 4 servi: Chrysogonus had been Sulla's slave.

20 6 versabatur, displayed itself.—quam viam munitet (indir. quest.): for road-building, both literal and figurative, the Romans used the engineering term munire.

20 7 fidem, etc., your honor (good faith), your oath, and your courts: i.e. after getting possession of political power, these low-born fellows were now aiming at the courts, the one security of public faith and good government.—iusiurandum: the jurors were under oath to give a righteous judgment.

20 9 hicine (emphat.), here, i.e. in the courts (as opposed to politics).

20 11 neque . . . possit: Cicero does not wish to encourage him by admitting for a moment that he can really do anything in this case: it is the fact that he has dared to hope to accomplish something, that is an outrage.—verear: subj. because it expresses not a real reason, but one introduced for the sole purpose of being contradicted: § 321, R. (); B. 286, I, b; G. 541, N.²; H. 516, 2 (588, ii); H. & B.

20 13 talis viros: cf. p. 13, l. 8.

20 15 (SECT. 46.) exspectata, so long waited for. For some years (B.C. 87–83), while Sulla was in the East, the Marian faction had full control at Rome, and a reign of terror prevailed.

20 17 servoli, diminutive of contempt.—bona, estates; fortunas (more generally), wealth.

20 18 id actum est: cf. p. 19, l. 22.

20 19 senserim, sided with them: this verb, with its noun sententia, often refers to political opinions.

20 20 inermis, i.e. had he taken up arms, his regret would have been deeper.

20 22 cuique, to every man in proportion as he is, etc.: § 93 c (); cf. B. 252, 5, c; G. 318, 2; H. 458, I (515, 2); H. & B.

20 25 probe novit: note the strong sarcasm, which points the distinction between the noble cause which was at stake and the sordid motives of Chrysogonus.

20 26 resistetur, impersonal. — ille: here indefinite, referring to the supposed person who thinks himself attacked.

20 27 rationem, interests (so that what touches one touches the other): a mercantile figure, as we might say, "who thinks his accounts are mixed up with his."

20 28 laeditur, etc., is injured by being separated, etc.

V. PERORATIO (§§ 47-57)

Sects. 47-52. The attack on Chrysogonus is Cicero's: Roscius asks for life alone. Feigned appeal to Chrysogonus to spare his victim. Powerful friends of Roscius.

With sect. 47 begins the last formal division of the speech,—the peroratio. This consists, as was common with Roman advocates, in an appeal to the sympathy of the court (there is a good example in the closing portion of Cicero's Defence of Milo).

20 30 (SECT. 47.) mea, emphatic. Cicero wishes to avoid prejudice to his client by himself assuming sole responsibility for these words. At the same time this section serves as a skilful means of transition. It is so important for Cicero to show that this case has no political bearings that he has been forced to abandon the question of the murder for a time, and to discuss the illegal sale of the property. He must now return to the charge against his client, and he does so by remarking that Roscius has no complaint to make of his treatment by Chrysogonus if the latter will only let him off with his life.

21 2 morum, the ways of men. — vos, i.e. Chrysogonus and his abettors in the accusation; vos is expressed, not as being specially emphatic, but from the Latin fondness for contrasting persons with each other.

21 3 more, in the regular way. — iure gentium: the "law common to all nations," as opposed to ius civile, or law of the state; thus it is used as nearly equivalent to natural right.

21 4 a vobis, i.e. once clear of guilt, and acquitted of this shocking crime, he will leave you unmolested.

21 6 rogat: a feigned appeal to his persecutors, intended to move the compassion of the jury for Roscius and their indignation against Chrysogonus.

21 7 in suam rem: in a former passage (omitted in this edition) allusion is made to a charge that Roscius had fraudulently kept back part of his father's property.

21 9 concessit, etc., has given up (the immovable property), counted and weighed (the rest).

21 10 anulum, probably the gold ring indicating his rank as eques.

21 11 se ipsum, etc., and has reserved nothing else besides his naked self.

21 14 (SECT. 48.) quod, quia: § 321 (); B. 286, 1; G. 540; H. 516, i (588, 1); H. & B. .

21 27 praeter ceteros, more than anybody else. — ne quando: i.e. some time when there comes a political reaction.

21 28 patria, of their fathers.

21 29 (SECT. 49.) facis iniuriam, i.e. you do wrong (i.e. to Sulla). — maiorem spem: in this and the preceding sentence Cicero artfully suggests that Chrysogonus has no confidence that Sulla's constitution will last, and that he therefore wishes to remove a dangerous claimant in case of another political overturn. This insinuation would, of course, tend to prejudice the partisans of Sulla against Chrysogonus.

22 6 cruenta (pred.): the expression of the thought is made more vivid by the use of words exactly appropriate to the killing of a man and the stripping (detrahere) of his dead body.

22 8 (SECT. 50.) rem tuam, your interests.

22 13 quasi nescias, as if you did not know: § 312 (); B. 307, 1 and 2; G. 602; H. 513, ii, and N.¹ (584, 2); H. & B. .

22 14 spectatissima, most estimable; the friends of Roscius are purposely exalted, in order to influence the court. — cum, concessive.

22 16 cum esset, though she was, etc. — femina, mulier: observe the distinction between the words, the latter being always used in speaking of the tenderness of the feminine nature. — quanto: translate however much (though the Latin is definite); the usual correlative is supplied by non minora, fully as great.

22 19 (SECT. 51.) Observe the clever transition. Cicero suggests that, since there are no other assignable causes for the implacability of Chrysogonus, perhaps he may be offended by the zeal of the defence. This enables him to pass at once to an emphatic assertion of the influential connections of his client.

22 20 pro patris, etc., in accordance with his father's friendly relations and personal influence (see above, sect. 1), i.e. by an advocacy proportionate in number and influence to the number and attachment of his father's friends.

22 22 sin . . . vindicarent, i.e. if all the citizens were disposed to right his wrongs.

22 23 pro eo, etc., in view of the fact that (i.e. with a due regard to the way in which) the highest interests of the State (summa res publica) are assailed.

22 24 haec, these outrages. Observe that English often requires descriptive words which the Latin can omit as being implied in the context. — consistere, etc., hinting that the accusers would be in danger of violence.

22 25 nunc, as it is ("as things stand": opposed to the preceding suppositions).

22 26 sane, I'm sure.

22 27 (SECT. 52.) quae domi: i.e. the personal protection of Roscius, supply of money, providing of witnesses, etc.

22 28 fori . . . rationem, the business of forum and court, i.e. the preliminaries of the trial.

22 29 ut videtis, i.e. he is here in court.

22 31 aetas, youth.

23 1 adsiduitate, constant presence, probably at the preliminary proceedings.

23 3 sectorum, a pun: the word means both buyers (of confiscated property) and cut-throats.

23 4 hac nobilitate, i.e. such nobles as he.

23 5 haec res, the present state of things. — ei, such.

23 6 qui . . . facerent: in this clause (as often in Latin) purpose and result approach so closely as to be indistinguishable.

23 10 loco, rank in life.

Sects. 53–57. Final appeal to the jurors.

23 13 (SECT. 53.) nostra, nobis, identifying himself with his client.

23 16 si . . . habet, if he is not content (lit. does not regard [it] as enough).

23 17 nisi, etc., unless his cruelty is also sated with blood (lit. blood is furnished to his cruelty).

23 21 hoc tempore, in these times.

23 22 versata est, has prevailed.

23 25 versari, live.

23 25 (SECT. 54.) ad eamne rem, is it for this that, etc.

23 27 solent, the emphat. position may be represented by translating, it is the custom, etc.

23 32 qui excipiatis, to cut off.

24 2 consilium: the jury, or body of iudices, was called consilium. By calling it a public council, Cicero enhances its dignity and importance.

24 4 (SECT. 55.) an vero, or can it be true that, etc. In this use of an, the first question is omitted, and the second is often a reductio ad absurdum, as here. The full thought is, "Do you not agree with me, or can it really (vero) be?" etc. (See § 211, b (); B. 162, 4, a; G. 457, 1; H. 353, N.⁴ (380, 3); H. & B. .) — agi, is their object (aliquid agere is to aim at something).

24 5 ut . . . tollantur, that . . . be got rid of, in one way or another.

24 6 in vestro iureiurando, i.e. in the severity which your oath might seem to bind you to exercise. — periculo, the case (often used with reference to defendants).

24 7 ad quem pertineat, i.e. on whom the suspicion rests.

24 8 sectorem . . . accusatorem, i.e. T. Roscius Magnus, at once purchaser, enemy, cut-throat, and accuser.

24 12 (SECT. 56.) obstare, stands against (cf. sect. 20, above).

24 18 suscipere noluit: the law by which the proscriptions were instituted was passed by the people directly, without the action of the Senate.

24 19 more maiorum, i.e. that every capital judgment was subject to an appeal to the people in the comitia centuriata.

24 20 publico consilio, i.e. by their official action.

24 21 eorum, refers back to eos, l. 18, above.

24 22 reicitis, etc., pres. for fut.: § 276, c (); G. 228; H. 467, 5 (533, 2); H. & B. .

24 26 (SECT. 57.) quibus: the antecedent is eis (l. 27).

24 28 quin intellegat: § 319, d (); B. 284, 3; G. 556; H. 504, 1 (595); H. & B. .

25 1 pati nolite, do not suffer: § 269, a (); B. 276, c; G. 271, 2; H. 489, 1 (561, 1); H. & B. .

25 3 hominibus, etc., has taken from the gentlest of men the sense of mercy, through familiarity with distress (lit. in plur.). For the dative, see § 229 (); B. 180, 2, d; G. 345 and R.¹; H. 386 (429); H. & B. .

IMPEACHMENT OF VERRES

ARGUMENT

CHAP. I. The jurors are congratulated on the opportunity of restoring the good name of the senatorial courts by convicting Verres. — 2, 3. Attempts of Verres to avoid the trial: placing all his hope in bribery, he is intriguing for the postponement of the case. — 4, 5. His crimes in administration, of pillage, extortion, and cruelty, are flagrant and notorious. — 6. Hence bribery is his only resource: his attempt to contract in advance for acquittal. — 7, 8. His hopes in the election of Hortensius as consul and Metellus as prætor for the following year. — 9, 10. Cicero's anxiety. The great effort to have the case tried before Metellus, which was to be effected by delaying the trial till after the holidays. — 11. Cicero proposes to display his case at once, without argument, and so prevent its being laid over. — 12, 13. The domination of Hortensius is dangerous to the state and must be met by proofs of corruption in the senatorial courts. — 14, 15. The acquittal of Verres will be subversive of the whole judicial system: the jurors are urged to vindicate the courts by convicting him. — 16. All Rome is on the watch: the court itself is on trial: acquittal can have but one meaning. — 17. Glabrio is urged to stand firm. — 18. The Sicilians must not be baffled. Cicero, by despatch, will prevent the case from going over to the next year: he will introduce his witnesses at once, without previous argument. Brief statement of the charges, including the plunder of 4,000,000 sesterces from the Sicilians.

With the trial of Verres the student may compare the impeachment of Warren Hastings in the eighteenth century, probably the most famous modern instance of the arraignment of a provincial governor for alleged misgovernment, extortion, and cruelty. The prosecution in this case (and in particular Burke) seem to have modelled their speeches on the Verrine orations of Cicero, and many parallels may easily be discovered. A few of these are quoted in these notes. That the similarity of the two situations was clearly felt at the time may be seen from Lord Erskine's Defence of Stockdale (Dec., 1789) on a charge connected with the impeachment of Hastings: "When Cicero impeached Verres before the great tribunal of Rome, of similar cruelties and depredations in her provinces, the Roman people were not left to such inquiries. All Sicily surrounded the Forum, demanding justice upon her plunderer and spoiler, with tears and imprecations. It was not by the eloquence of the orator, but by the cries and tears of the miserable, that Cicero prevailed in that illustrious case. Verres fled from the oaths of his accusers and their witnesses, and not from the voice of Tully."

Chap. I. The trial of Verres gives the senatorial order an opportunity to redeem the reputation of the courts.

Verres had no defence, but had expected to escape by bribing the jury in case he should be prosecuted. His guilt was notorious, so that the chief question now to be determined was that of the integrity of the jury. Cicero accordingly makes this the main point of the present oration : it is the court, he insists, that is on trial rather than Verres.

PAGE 28. LINE 1. (SECT. 1.) erat optandum, what was chiefly to be wished: not implying a protasis contrary to fact. See § 311, c (); B. 304, 3; G. 254, R.¹; H. 511, 1, N.³ (583); H. & B. — quod . . . pertinebat, the one thing which most tended (or, was of chief importance).

28 2 invidiam infamiamque, odium and ill repute, from the partisan use of the courts by the Senators. — vestri ordinis, i.e. the senatorial order. The word ordo signified, loosely, any recognized body of citizens — as freedmen, publicans, clerks; but it was more especially used of the two powerful classes of the Roman aristocracy, the Senatorial and the Equestrian, which struggled with each other for power during the last century of the Republic. The Senators, from whom the jurors were at this time taken (see note on Rosc. Am., p. 2, l. 1), formed a limited (300 to 600) order of nobility which virtually controlled the government. The equites constituted a moneyed aristocracy. Naturally these two orders had opposing interests, as the Senators were excluded from trade and the equites practically from political power. Their antagonism showed itself more especially in the matter of the provinces, which the Senators wished to oppress by official plunder and the equites by commercial extortion.

28 4 summo . . . tempore, most critical time (more lit. extreme crisis): the year of the consulship of Pompey and Crassus (B.C. 70).

28 5 inveteravit (emphatic position), there has come to be deeply rooted (observe that the figure is quite different in the Latin). — opinio, notion or idea (not so strong as our opinion, which would be sententia).

28 7 exteras nationes: the reference is, of course, to the peoples subject to Rome, who were aggrieved by the rapacity of the provincial governors.

28 8 his iudiciis: in consequence of the situation described above (note on ordinis, l. 2), it became all important for one class or the other to control the courts, before which any misdoings of either party were likely to come for trial. For years these two orders had struggled for such control. At this particular time the courts were in the hands of the Senators, who were bound together by a common cause to shield any one of their number who might be charged with misconduct as a provincial governor.

29 2 neminem (more emphatic than nullum): translate, never.

29 3 (SECT. 2.) cum (causal) sint, when men are ready. — contionibus et legibus, harangues and bills (proposed laws). The proposition of a law which took the exclusive control of the courts from the Senators was even now pending, and the law (lex Aurelia) was passed before the case of Verres was decided.

29 5 conentur, purpose clause.

29 7 magnitudine, abl. of means; spe, abl. of specification.

29 9 actor, complainant, i.e. agent or attorney for conducting the suit in personal processes (in personam).

29 11 adduxi enim hominem, etc.: cf. Burke, Impeachment of Warren Hastings: "We have brought before your Lordships the first man in property and power; we have brought before you the head, the chief, the captain-general in iniquity, — one in whom all the frauds, all the peculations, all the tyranny in India are embodied, disciplined, and arrayed. Then, if we have brought before you such a person, if you strike at him, you will not have need of a great many more examples, — you strike at the whole corps if you strike at the head." — in quo, in whose case. — reconciliare, etc., win back the lost repute.

29 13 possetis, purpose. — depeculatorem, etc.: for a more complete statement of these charges, see chs. iv., v.

29 14 iuris urbani, i.e. as praetor urbanus (see sect. 12).

29 16 (SECT. 3.) vos, opposed to ego, below. — religiose, according to your oath.

29 18 religionem veritatemque: here, feeling of obligation and regard for the truth. Notice that the Latin, having a comparatively poor vocabulary, is obliged to use one word for all the phases or sides of an idea; hence such a word as veritas may mean truth (abstractly), a truth (concretely), the truth (generally), regard for truth, or truthful conduct.

29 19 iudicium, etc., i.e. the court will be found wanting, — not a suitable defendant or a zealous prosecutor.

29 21 equidem, i.e. for my own part.

29 22 quas partim, some of which.

29 23 devitarim, subj. as a part of the concession contained in cum . . . sint: § 342 (); B. 324, 1; G. 663, 1; H. 529, ii (652); H. & B.

Chaps. II, III. Verres had already relied on bribing the courts. His vain attempt to delay his trial by the trumped-up Achaian case. His present effort to procure a postponement by corrupt means.

29 24 neque . . . neque, following numquam, does not destroy the negative, but is more emphatic than aut . . . aut.

29 29 (SECT. 4.) istius: see note on Rosc. Am., p. 4, l. 16.

29 30 Glabrioni: the prætor presiding.

29 31 ordini . . . senatorio, the senatorial order, nay, the very name of Senator.

29 32 dictitat, constantly repeats: § 167, b (); B. 155, 2, a; G. 191, 1; H. 336 (364); H. & B. , .—esse metuendum: for erat met. in dir. disc.; § 336 A, N.¹ (); H. & B. , hence followed by the secondary sequence, i.e. those would have to fear (if the case were theirs), but he, etc.—quod, i.e. only what.

30 1 multis, i.e. not only for himself but also for his counsel and for those whom he may wish to bribe,—in particular, the jurors (see sect. 40).

30 3 pecunia belongs to both clauses, as is shown by their parallelism.—possit: for tense, see § 287, c (); B. 268, 7; G. 513; H. 495, vi (550); H. & B. .

30 4 (SECT. 5.) esset: imperf. subj. in protasis of a continued condition lasting till now; § 308, a (); B. 304, 2; G. 597, R.¹; H. 510, N.² (579, 1); H. & B. .

30 6 fefellisset, he would have eluded us.—cadit: pres. tense, of an action lasting till now; § 276, a (); B. 259, 4; G. 230; H. 467, 2 (533); H. & B. .

30 9 corrumpendi iudici, of bribing the court (cf. our phrase “bribery and corruption”).

30 11 factus sit: for sequence, see § 287, c, N. (); B. 268, 6; G. 513; H. 495, vi (550); H. & B. ; notice that the perf. would necessarily be used in the dir. disc. with cum primum.

30 13 tempus . . . offenderet, he hit an unfavorable time; because popular sentiment was already so exasperated in regard to the corruption of the courts.

30 14 (SECT. 6.) in Siciliam inquirendi, i.e. for going into Sicily to make an investigation (hence the acc.).

30 15 invenit qui, he found some one who.

30 16 in Achaïam, sc. inquirendi: on this trumped-up case, which was intended to have the precedence of the trial of Verres, see Intro. to this Oration (p. 27).—ut . . . conficeret, purp. clause dependent on invenit.

30 19 Brundisium, Brindisi, the port whence the greater part of Italian travel, now as then, embarks for the East.

30 20 obii, went throughout.—populorum, communities: the word populus, meaning originally multitude, is a semi-abstract noun often used to denote the community in its official capacity. Our use of the word people in some later meanings frequently produces confusion in the minds of beginners. The political system of the ancients was composed of an indefinite number of petty communities, all possessing a certain degree of independence. Hence the plur. is used here to indicate several such communities.

30 21 ut . . . posset (clause of result), imperf. by seq. of tenses: translate, however, can.

30 23 qui . . . obsideret (purpose), to block my chance (of bringing Verres to trial).

30 25 (SECT. 7.) nunc: i.e. now that his former scheme has failed.

30 26 hoc, this new idea. What the idea is is detailed in sects. 7, 8: viz. the reasons for desiring a postponement together with grounds for hoping for it.

30 30 civis, citizens, i.e. Romans travelling or doing business in the provinces, or provincials who had received the citizenship.

30 31 socios, allies: citizens of communities which, although embraced within the boundaries of Roman provinces, had, for special reasons, been allowed to retain a nominal independence, with their own laws and magistrates.

31 2 auctoritatibus, documents, i.e. official testimony ("resolutions," etc.) relating to the acts of Verres.

31 3 (SECT. 8.) bonis, good citizens; here, as generally in Cicero, used in a partisan sense for the aristocracy.

31 6 experiatur: this violates the sequence of tenses in order to make the meaning clear; the imperf. would refer to the time of getting the money, not to the present moment; cf. § 287, h, N. (); B. 268, 7; G. § 509, i, N.; H. & B.

31 7 fuerit: the subj. shows that this is the thought of Verrès, and not merely something thrown in by Cicero. — tempus: the present scheme of the defence is by corrupt means to stave off the trial to a more advantageous time (see chs. vi–viii).

31 8 posset: imperf. to express his purpose at the time of the purchase.

31 9 criminum vim, the force of the charges. — poterat: indic., the reason being Cicero's. (The whole passage is an instructive example of the freedom of a living language from its own trammels. Rules are made for language, not language for rules.)

31 12 (SECT. 9.) eloquentia, gratia: even mere rhetorical skill or personal influence would be, to a criminal who had no case (causa), a respectable (honesto) means of escape compared with these attempts at corruption.

31 13 profecto, I am sure.

31 14 aucuparetur, be fishing for (lit. set nets for birds).

31 15 ut . . . fieret, as to have some one chosen to be put on trial; the Senate itself was insulted by the selection of one of its members to be set up as a man of straw, that Verres might get clear. The reference is to the trumped-up case with regard to abuses in Achaia (see sect. 6).

31 16 hic, i.e. Verres.

31 17 (SECT. 10.) quibus rebus, from this (abl. of means with per-spicio).

31 20 consilio, panel, i.e. the body of jurors (cf. Rosc. Am., p. 24, l. 2). An obvious, and apparently a deserved, compliment. Whatever the general character of the courts, Cicero had in this instance secured a jury on whom he could rely.

31 21 in reiectione iudicavit, decided at the challenging ("throwing out") of the jury: i.e. on seeing the kind of men challenged by the two sides respectively.

31 22 ut . . . constitueret . . . arbitraretur: subst. clauses of result (justified by the introductory ea) instead of the more regular acc. and inf. of ind. disc.; § 332, f(); G. 557, R. and N.¹; H. cf. 501, iii (571, 4); H. & B.

Chaps. IV, V. Crimes of Verres from his youth up. His quæstorships. His city-prætorship. His career in Sicily. His guilt is notorious.

31 30 quaestura, quaestorship, the first grade of political honor.

32 1 Carbonem: Carbo was the leader of the Marian faction after the death of Marius and Cinna. He was consul B.C. 82, the year of Sulla's return and victory. Verres was his quæstor (or paymaster), and went over to the enemy with the money-chest when he saw which side was likely to prevail.

32 3 necessitudinem religionemque: the quæstor was originally nominated specially by the consul; and the peculiarly close and sacred relation (necessitudo) existing between them was known as pietas,—a sentiment akin to filial affection. The designation by lot (sors) was also held to be a token of divine will, and therefore sacred (religio). In betraying his consul, then, Verres was guilty of more than an ordinary breach of trust,—he committed an act of impiety.

32 4 legatio: Verres was in B.C. 80-79 legatus and acting quaestor (pro quaestore) of Dolabella, whose province was Cilicia. The extortions of the two were practised in the adjoining regions of Pamphylia, Pisidia, and parts of Asia (i.e. of the Roman province of Asia, the old kingdom of Pergamus, embracing the western part of Asia Minor); totius is a rhetorical exaggeration.

32 7 scelus . . . quaestorium: Verres treated Dolabella much as he had treated Carbo. Neither of these infamous commanders deserved better treatment; but this does not excuse the perfidy of Verres.

32 9 pro quaestore, acting quaestor: when there was a vacancy in a provincial quaestorship, the commander might appoint any person to perform the duties of the office.

32 10 adduxit: Dolabella, in addition to the odium of his own crimes, had to bear the infamy of the outrageous acts of Verres; and after all Verres saved himself by turning against him (oppugnavit) and appearing as a witness in his trial for extortion.

32 12 (SECT. 12.) aedium, etc. The public buildings were regularly under the charge of the aedile, not of the praetor; the cases referred to here were certain flagrant instances of corruption and extortion arising out of contracts for public buildings, in which the praetor had it exceptionally in his power to interfere for his own advantage.

32 13 in iure dicundo: ius dicere (iurisdictio) declaring the law was the primary function of the praetor. bonorum addictio is the adjudging of property to a claimant; condonatio (grant) is the act of giving it up to a defendant: no matter which way the decision of Verres went in a case, his action was sure to be unlawful and for his own corrupt ends.

32 14 instituta, precedents. The edicts of the praetors made up a body of common law, not absolutely binding, however, on their successors.

32 15 iam vero, but finally, introducing the climax of the list of crimes.

32 18 possit: for tense, see § 287, c (); B. 268, 7; G. 513; H. 495, vi (550); H. & B.

32 21 (SECT. 13.) communia iura, the same as ius gentium, those laws common to all mankind (see note on ius gentium, Rosc. Am., p. 21, l. 3). The terms leges, senatus-consulta, iura include the three sources of provincial law.—tantum, [only] so much.

32 23 imprudentiam subterfugit, escaped his vigilance (lit. want of vigilance).

32 25 res, case.

32 26 res, property.

32 27 ab eo, away from him, i.e. the possessor.

32 28 aratorum, cultivators (whether tenants or proprietors), who paid tithes (decumae) to the state.

32 29 socii: see note on p. 30, l. 31.

32 30 cruciati et necati: a Roman citizen could not legally receive any punishment touching life or limb, except by judgment of his peers in Rome. Thus, Jesus was crucified by the Roman governor Pilate under the ordinary provincial law applying to Jews; while Paul, a Roman citizen of the free city Tarsus, appealed to Cæsar, and was sent to Rome for trial. (See extract from Verr. vi, pp. 59–65: “Crucifixion of a Roman Citizen.”)

32 32 rei facti, accused (rei from reus). The details of these charges are given in the five orations of the Accusatio; it would require too much space to repeat them here.

33 1 eiecti, expelled from the country.

33 4 optimae, best in themselves; opportunissimae, most valuable under the circumstances.

33 6 (SECT. 14.) regum: the famous kings of Syracuse, — Hiero, Agathocles, etc.

33 8 imperatorum: Marcellus, who conquered Syracuse, and Scipio Africanus the elder, who had Sicily as his province and crossed over from there for the conquest of Carthage.

33 12 deum, i.e. statue of a god (see pp. 55, 56).

33 14 videretur: subj. of characteristic.

33 15 commemorare: complem. infin. for subj. with ne or quominus; § 271, a (); B. 295, 3 and N.; G. 548, N.²; H. 505, ii; H. & B. 000.

33 19 (SECT. 15.) at enim (a supposed objection), but, you may say.

33 21 quin . . . possit: § 319 d (); B. 284, 3; G. 556; H. 504, I (595, I); H. & B. .

33 22 ut . . . timendum sit: clause of result.

33 24 multitudo: including a large number of Sicilians, present at Rome for the purpose of prosecuting Verres, and of course personally cognizant of his crimes.

Chaps. VI, VII. Verres attempted to buy up the court in advance, but, on the selection of the present jury, lost heart (sects. 16, 17). The election of Hortensius to the consulship gave him fresh courage (sect. 17). A significant incident on election day (sects. 18–20).

Cicero here returns to the subject of bribery. He has already asserted (sects. 3–10) that this had always been the sole hope of Verres; he has pointed out that Verres need not expect to corrupt the present tribunal (sect. 10), and that his guilt is so enormous and so notorious that no honest jury could fail to convict him (sects. 10-14). He now goes on to show that in endeavoring to postpone the trial Verres is, as heretofore, trying to defeat justice by corrupt means. In establishing this point, the orator reviews the several schemes of bribery, thus leading up to the matter immediately before the court and bringing out the fact that it is like the devices that had preceded it.

33 28 eloquentiam, etc.: see note on p. 31, l. 12.

33 30 potentia, control of the courts: a stronger word than gratia ("personal influence") or auctoritate ("official influence") and indicating a kind of domination over the courts. — simulat, proponit: notice the emphatic position of these verbs, as opposed to what Verres is really doing.

33 31 proponit, puts forward (i.e. as his backers). — inania, idle: i.e. mere names, because Verres does not really rely upon these men, but upon a scheme which Cicero details in the following sections.

34 3 noti, notorious. — simulat: cf. note on simulat, l. 30, above.

34 8 (SECT. 16.) redemptio: a contract with another party for buying up the court.

34 9 mansit . . . pacto, held on to the terms of the bargain (hendiadys): until the jury was actually made up, the bargain could not be absolutely concluded; when the character of the jury was known, the contract was annulled.

34 10 reiectio: after Cicero's careful challenging, the lot had fortunately given a trustworthy jury.

34 13 istorum, i.e. the partisans of Verres.

34 14 (SECT. 17.) praeclare, admirably well for the cause of justice, — libelli, lists.

34 16 color: a covert allusion to a former case, in which Hortensius had been counsel, and in which colored ballots were given to the bribed jurors in order to make sure that they voted as they had agreed (see sect. 40). — sententiis: this is the word regularly used for a formal and official expression of opinion in the Senate (vote) or in a court of justice (verdict).

34 17 cum, whereupon (inversion): § 325, b (); B. 288, 2; G. 581; H. 521, ii, 1 (600, i, 1); H. & B. . — ex alacri, from being, etc.; cf. the Latinism in Milton, Par. Lost, ix. 563: "How cam'st thou speakable of mute?"

34 20 his diebus paucis, a few days ago: the consular and other elections were held this year, as usual, toward the end of July.

34 22 famae, fortunis, dat. after insidiae comparantur. — per eosdem homines, i.e. the same professional bribers (the redemptor, etc., referred to in sect. 16).

34 25 aperto, etc., when the door to suspicion had once been opened.

34 27 (SECT. 18.) nam: introducing Cicero's account of the significant incident referred to above in the words pertenui argumento (l. 24).

34 28 reducebatur: the successful candidate was escorted home by his friends after the election. — Campo: see note on p. 104, l. 7.

34 29 Curio: C. Scribonius Curio, one of the leaders of the aristocratic party, was always a good friend of Cicero's. Curio, like Hortensius and Metellus, was a man of excellent reputation. His support of Verres was due to political and social ties.

34 30 honoris causā: see note on Rosc. Am., p. 3, l. 28. The words in brackets are probably not genuine.

35 2 tamen, i.e. in spite of Curio's open way of speaking.

35 4 ratio, consideration.

35 5 (SECT. 19.) videt, etc.: observe the hist. pres., marking a change to lively narrative. — fornicem Fabianum, the Fabian Arch, erected B.C. 109 by Q. Fabius Maximus Allobrogicus, — one of the earliest triumphal arches in Rome. It stood at the southern end of the Forum, and served as an entrance to it. Fig. 3 (Arch of Gallienus) shows the situation of such structures with respect to streets.

35 12 defertur signifies a formal announcement by some one person; narrabat means told, casually, as a piece of news. The use of tenses in viderat . . . narrabat is like that in the general condition in past time: § 309, c () ; B. cf. 302, 3 ; G. 594, N.¹ ; H. & B.

35 14 criminum ratione, the nature of the charges.

35 15 positam, resting on.

35 16 altius, deeper.

35 18 (SECT. 20.) ratiocinabantur, reasoned (the imperf. describing a state of mind, and one existing in different persons).

35 20 ipse, etc. : cf. sect. 17, ll. 17-19.

35 22 quod, the fact that.

35 23 negotiatores, Roman citizens doing business in Sicily. — omnes . . . litterae, all kinds of, etc. — publicae, official, from cities of Sicily (as auctoritates, above).

35 26 existimationem, opinion, i.e. their estimate of the character of Verres.

35 27 unius, i.e. Hortensius. — moderatione, control. — vertentur, are to turn on.

Chaps. VIII-IX (sect. 25). Metellus is chosen (by lot) to preside over the Court of Extortion for the next year. Joy of Verres. His attempts to defeat by bribery Cicero's election to the ædileship revealed to Cicero. Cicero made anxious, but finally elected.

35 30 quidem (concessive), it is true: this criminal may be rescued, but such a thing will not be allowed to happen again: the judicial power will be given into other hands (i.e., those of the equites); cf. de transferendis iudiciis, below. — nos, i.e. we Senators.

36 1 (SECT. 21.) hominis amplissimi, i.e. Curio: the congratulations of so honored a man showed the expected effect of the election on this trial.

36 2 nova, strange (surprising). — dissimulare, to conceal the fact that, etc.

36 5 sortirentur, were drawing their lots: the particular posts or duties of coördinate magistrates (like the several prætors) were assigned by lot. — Metello: a brother of Q. Metellus Creticus, consul elect, and of L. Metellus, prætor in Sicily. — obtigisset, had fallen to (the regular word for this kind of assignment) — ut . . . quaereret, to have charge of the Court of Extortion: subst. clause of result; § 332, a, 2 (); B. 297, 2; G. 553, 3; H. 501, i, 1 (571, 1); H. & B. .

36 6 de pecuniis repetundis, of extortion (lit. concerning demanding back the [extorted] property).

36 7 factam, offered. — pueros, slaves.

36 9 (SECT. 22.) sane, you may be sure. — ne haec quidem, etc., this incident did not please me either. — neque . . . intellegebam, i.e. his confidence in the integrity of Metellus was so great that he did not even yet see through the tricks of the defence.

36 10 tanto opere, so very well (with intellegebam).

36 12 reperiebam: the imperf. denotes a succession of items of information.

36 13 senatore, etc.: the Senator, a man of the same class as Verres, put the money to be used in the elections and trial into the hands of an eques, one of the class that had the management of all such financial operations. He retained, however, say (quasi) ten baskets, to be used directly to defeat Cicero's election as ædile.

36 15 nomine, on account of. — divisores, managers. The money to be used at elections was put into the hands of sequestres (election agents), who themselves made use of divisores to approach the voters personally. On this occasion, the exigency was so great that Verres (istum) summoned the divisores to his own house, without the mediation of sequestres.

36 16 (SECT. 23.) omnia debere, was bound to do anything for me.

36 20 proximis, the last.

36 23 negasse audere, said they did not dare.

36 24 fortem, staunch (ironical), in allusion to audere (l. 23).

36 25 Romilia, without tribu expressed, — the regular way of giving the name of a man's tribe. — ex optima disciplina, from the best school (ironical), i.e. that of Verres' father.

36 26 HS: the defeat of Cicero would, therefore, cost nearly $25,000; see §§ 377-380 (); G. 493; H. 647 (757, 2); H. & B.

36 28 se unā facturos esse, that they would act with him.

37 1 (SECT. 24.) A lively description of the embarrassment in which Cicero was placed at the end of July by the election and the trial, both coming on together.

37 2 in his ipsis, in that too (as well as the trial).

37 4 agere . . . deterrebar, from doing freely what, etc., I was deterred by, etc.: § 331, e, 2 (); B. 295, N.; G. 423, 2, N.²; H. 505, ii (596, 2); H. & B.

37 5 petitioni, canvass.

37 7 ratio, good policy.

37 9 (SECT. 25.) denuntiatus esse, that a message was sent. This compound implies a peremptory and threatening message.

37 10 primum corresponds to arcessit alter, etc., p. 38, l. 4, below. — ut venirent: subj. of purpose, since denuntiatus est expresses a command; § 332, h (); B. cf. 295, I; G. 546, N.¹; H. 540, iii (564); H. & B. 000.

37 11 sane liberos, pretty independent, i.e. in refusing to come. If he had been consul, instead of merely consul elect, they would have had to come.

37 12 venisse: the subj. acc. is eos, the implied antecedent of qui.

37 13 ceterorum, i.e. those for consuls and prætors, which had lately been held.

37 14 cursare (historical infinitive), ran hither and thither.

37 15 paternos amicos: see p. 36, l. 26.

37 16 appellare et convenire, accosted and conferred with.

37 18 cuius: the antecedent is eiusdem (l. 19). — de fide, i.e. his good faith to the Sicilians: probably a hint that Cicero himself had been approached with a bribe.

Sects. 26–31. Cicero learns of the efforts made to have the trial postponed to the next year in order that it might be brought before Metellus. The Sicilians are threatened by one of the consuls elect (Q. Metellus Creticus) (sects. 26–28). By that time not only would there be a favorably disposed presiding judge, but most of the jury would have been changed. It seemed easy to get the trial put off, for many holidays intervened (sects. 29–31).

37 26 (SECT. 26.) eo, in this course, i.e. postponing the trial. — esse: ind. disc.

37 27 The asterisk marks a defect in the text.

37 29 praerogativam, an earnest. In the comitia centuriata, it was determined by lot which century should first cast its vote. The vote of this century, called praerogativa (prae-rogo), was superstitiously regarded as an omen or earnest of the result which it was likely to decide. Hence the word is here used of the effective support given to Metellus at the polls by Verres. The praerogativa which Q. Metellus gave to Verres, in return for the praerogativae of the comitia, is described in the next section.

38 3 (SECT. 27.) cuiquam, for anything.

38 4 alter consul designatus: Q. Cæcilius Metellus Creticus (see sect. 21). The three brothers, fast friends of Verres, were so situated as to promise the greatest help the next year, when Quintus would be consul, and Marcus prætor, presiding over the court of Repetundae, while Lucius was already pro-prætor in Sicily. Some of the Sicilians, therefore, obeyed the summons of Metellus, although they had disregarded that of Hortensius (sect. 25). The object of Metellus was to induce the Sicilians to withdraw the suit, or at any rate to refrain from appearing as witnesses.

38 7 quaesiturum (technical term), was to preside over the court.

38 13 (SECT. 28.) quid faceres: apodosis of cont. to fact construction, with protasis implied in innocente.

38 15 alienissimum, no kin whatever of yours.

38 16 dictitat, says incessantly (see next section). — alicui depends upon videatur.

38 17 ignoret, subj. of characteristic.

38 18 (SECT. 29.) fato, ut ceteros, etc.: the Metelli seemed born to hold office. Cicero here alludes to a verse written by the poet Nævius, a hundred and fifty years before: "Fatō Metelli Rōmae fiunt cōsules."

38 22 populi existimationi, reputation with the people. — M'. Glabronem: observe the skill with which this compliment to the prætor before whom Cicero is now arguing the case, and the following compliments to the iudices, are put into the mouth of Verres.

38 23 illud: referring to what follows. Cicero makes Verres point out the changes in the jury which must follow from changes in the government that is to come in with the new year.

38 24 conlega: both Cæsonius and Cicero were aediles designati.

38 25 expediat: fut. apodosis with conemur as its protasis, but hardly to be distinguished from subj. of characteristic (cf. § 319, headnote).

38 27 Iuniano consilio: referring to a case four years before, in which wholesale bribery had been proved, so that the presiding prætor, Junius, as well as almost the entire consilium (body of jurors), had been stamped with infamy. Cæsonius, a member of the jury, had been proof against corruption, and had disclosed the whole affair (in medium protulit).

38 29 hunc iudicem, him as jurymen. — ex Kal. Ian.: after the New Year; for at that time he would be excluded from the panel by his ædileship.

38 32 (SECT. 30.) P. Sulpicius: he had probably just been elected quæstor.

39 1 Non. Dec. (Dec. 5): on this day the new quæstors entered on their office.

39 3 L. Cassius: the family characteristic here stated was proverbial (Cassiani iudices).

39 6 tribuni militares: at this time legion-commanders. — non iudicabunt, will not serve as jurors.

39 7 subsortiemur, i.e. we shall draw another to fill his place. This is the regular use of sub in similar compounds: as suffectus, subrogatus, etc.

39 9 prope toto: the jury, therefore, apparently consisted of about twelve or fifteen.

39 13 (SECT. 31.) Nonae, etc.: it was, therefore, about 3 P.M. of the 5th of August.

39 15 votivos: these games were in celebration of Pompey's victory over the Marian party in Spain (B.C. 72). — The votive games would occupy from Aug. 16 to Sept. 1 (August had at this time only 29 days); on Sept. 4 began the Ludi Romani, continuing till the 19th. The intervening days (Sept. 2, 3) were of no account for the trial, so that it could not be resumed before Sept. 20, a suspension of 34 days (prope quadraginta). The Ludi Victoriae (established by Sulla in honor of his victory) would continue from Oct. 27 to Nov. 1, and the Ludi Plebei from Nov. 4 to Nov. 17. All these games were sacred festivals, during which business was suspended: the time was occupied with religious observances, accompanied by races and dramatic entertainments.

39 18 tum denique, not till then.

39 20 Victoriae: see Fig. 4 (from the Column of Trajan).

39 21 perpauci: for the month of December was full of festivals.

39 23 rem integram, i.e. from the beginning. The zeal of the prosecution would have flagged, the public interest would have cooled down, and the jury would be almost wholly new.

The case would therefore have to be taken up de novo.

39 25 non retinuissem, i.e. I should have challenged him. Metellus was now one of the jurors.

39 25 (SECT. 32.) nunc, opposed to si diffisus essem, above.

39 26 eo, etc. (abl. abs.), with him as jurymen.

39 27 iurato, on oath. The iudices were sworn; the praetor was not. Metellus might therefore be trusted to vote honestly as a juror, though he might, when praetor, connive at the corruption of the jurymen. Cicero ran less risk of offending Metellus by thus accusing him of extreme partisanship than if he had accused him of perjury.

Sects. 32-50. To prevent postponement, Cicero will push the trial, dispensing with the usual long opening argument. He is forced to this by the tactics of Hortensius (sects. 32, 33). Cicero will oppose the arrogance of Hortensius and offers himself as the opponent of any who shall hereafter attempt to bribe the courts. The illegal domination of Hortensius is dangerous to justice. It must be met by proofs of judicial corruption, which are abundant (sects. 34-39). The acquittal of Verres will be subversive of the whole judicial system (sects. 40-42). The jurors are urged to vindicate the courts (sects. 43, 45). All Rome is on the watch, and bribery is sure to be detected. Not Verres, but the senatorial courts are on trial (sects. 46-50).

The skill of the argument in sects. 32-50 is remarkable. Cicero contrives, without directly asserting that Hortensius is guilty of judicial corruption, to suggest that he is in a measure responsible for its prevalence. He declares his intention of devoting his ædileship to exposing such practices, and adds that he expects to be opposed by Hortensius. He calls attention to several notorious cases of bribery which he means to use as illustrations in pressing his reforms. Then, in a moment, he makes it clear, by a sudden turn, that he has not been digressing, but simply accumulating force for his main point: "How shall I feel," he asks suddenly (sect. 40), "if I find this present case of Verres added to the long list of instances of corruption? His guilt is clear: IT IS THE COURT THAT IS ON TRIAL!" In this way what appears at the outset to be a personal attack on the opposing counsel is made a most effective means for the introduction of the central point of the whole oration.

39 31 legitimo tempore: he had a right to use twenty days for developing the points of the prosecution.

40 1 capiam, i.e. by showing, in a long speech, how carefully he had prepared his case.

40 4 ne elabatur, with periculum est, which takes the constr. of a verb of fearing.

40 6 possit: see § 320, a (); B. 283, 2; G. 631, 2; H. 503, 1 (591), H. & B.

40 7 (SECT. 33.) perpetua oratione, a continuous argument, before bringing up the witnesses. This is what we possess in the five speeches of the Accusatio, which, in the usual order of proceeding, would have been delivered before bringing up the witnesses, but which were in fact never spoken at all (see Introd. to the oration, page 28). — percipi, reaped: the regular term for gathering crops.

40 8 potuit, might have been: § 308, c (); B. 304, 3, a; G. 597, R.³; H. 511, 1, N.³ (583); H. & B.

40 9 publicis: see note on p. 35, l. 23. — tabulis, records; auctoritatibus, documents.

40 10 res omnis: here, after stating his plan briefly, Cicero goes off into a seeming digression against Hortensius. In this he shows clearly one of his principal motives in undertaking the prosecution, namely, to overthrow the latter's excessive control of the courts. The attack is skillfully introduced. His sole reason, he says, for departing from the ordinary course of procedure is that Hortensius does not wish to meet him in fair legal fight. The sally against Hortensius, again, serves as a transition to Cicero's final appeal to the sense of shame and the prudence of the court.

40 11 diluendis, explicandis: technical terms in argument (see Vocab.).

40 14 ex tua natura: Hortensius, like M. Metellus, was personally an amiable and honorable man, though pledged to a bad cause.

40 16 rationi, scheme, course, looking to the method; consilio, plan of action, looking to the end. Cicero contrasts them more than once.

40 17 (SECT. 34.) binos ludos, i.e. Pompêy's games and the Roman.

40 18 comperendinem, close my case (lit. adjourn over). After the testimony was all in, it was customary to adjourn over to the next day but one (comperendinare), in order to give opportunity for a rehearing (usually a brief one). When this stage had been reached, there was no chance for further postponement. Cicero's determination to bring about a comperendinatio before Pompey's games — i.e. within ten days — settled the case in his favor; for, as has been shown, the only hope of the defence lay in putting off the trial, Hortensius having absolutely nothing to say in behalf of his client's innocence.

40 19 necessarium, unavoidable (not a mere shrewd trick like that of Hortensius).

40 23 id: refers forward to eos velle, etc. (l. 24). — amplum et praeclarum, an honor and distinction (translating as nouns).

40 25 innocentiae (an almost technical term), purity of administration in Sicily (see Intro. to the oration).

40 26 maius quiddam: what this was is explained in sect. 35.

40 28 (SECT. 35.) illud: refers to istum . . . vocari (l. 29).

40 31 potentia, domineering (i.e. his illegal control of the courts); cupiditas (in a bad sense), unscrupulous eagerness (for gaining your case).

40 33 interponeretur: for fut. ind. of the dir. disc. — nunc: opposed to the time of videbatur.

41 1 regnum iudiciorum, lording it over the courts.

41 2 homines, i.e. the corrupt senatorial jurors.

41 4 inruere, etc., to be bent on making themselves hateful and offensive. — hoc, i.e. to break down Hortensius's control, and the corruption of a few Senators.

41 16 moneo, etc.: observe the climax. — deponere, deposit with the sequestres (see note on p. 36, l. 15).

41 17 accipere, take (money); recipere, undertake to do anything (upon request or the like). — polliceri, offer.

41 18 interpretes, go-betweens: the divisores are probably meant.

41 19 potentiam: it is hardly accidental that this is the same word used above (sect. 35, l. 31) of the influence of Hortensius. In the next section Cicero expressly asserts that he expects to meet with all possible opposition from the latter.

41 22 (SECT. 37.) erit, will be (it is true): notice the emphatic position, opposing it to the clause with tamen (l. 24). — imperio et potestate, military and civil power. Of the regular magistrates, all possessed potestas, i.e. power in general (including military power); but only consuls and prætors possessed the imperium, — i.e. sovereign power, as of a general in the field, somewhat limited, however, in the city by special privileges of Roman citizens.

41 28 commemorabuntur, shall be mentioned (by me). — certis rebus, well-ascertained facts.

41 29 agentur, made ground of action. — inter decem annos, i.e. since Sulla's Lex iudiciaria, transferring the courts to the senatorial order (see note on Rosc. Am., p. 2, l. 1).

42 1 (SECT. 38.) quingenta, i.e. from the law of Caius Gracchus, B.C. 123, to that of Sulla, B.C. 80.

42 2 ne tenuissima quidem suspicio: one of the exaggerations of the advocate. If the courts were really worse in B.C. 70 than they had been in 90, it was simply because the times were worse.

42 4 sublata, taken away. — populi Romani, etc., i.e. the ability of the people to hold in check the senatorial order by means of the tribunician power suspended by Sulla (see note on p. 43, l. 32).

42 5 Q. Calidius: prætor, B.C. 79; condemned for extortion in Spain. It seems that Calidius, being condemned de repetundis, with bitter irony assailed the bribed jurors on account of the smallness of the bribe for which he was condemned, saying that it was not respectable (honestum) to condemn an ex-prætor for so small a sum. The allusion shows that the corruption was notorious and universal.

42 6 HS triciens: 3,000,000 sestertii = $150,000 (nearly); § 379 (); G. p. 493; H. 647, iv, 1 (757); H. & B. . — praetorium: an ex-magistrate kept the rank of the highest office he had held, — as consularis, praetorius, aedilicius.

42 7 P. Septimio (Scævola), condemned B.C. 72; the damages were increased because of his connection with the odious consilium Iunianum (sect. 29). The amount extorted was estimated in a separate process (litis aestimatio), and in this case the money taken in bribery was included in the reckoning.

42 14 (SECT. 39.) inventi sint represents an hist. perf., and hence takes the secondary sequence (exirent): see § 287, i (); B. cf. 268, 7, b; G. 517, R.¹; H. & B. .

42 15 sortiente: the jurymen were drawn by lot by the presiding officer; in the case mentioned there was collusion between Verres and the persons drawn, so that the lot was a mere form. — qui . . . exirent (purp. clause), to be drawn for [the case of] a defendant to condemn him without a hearing (through a corrupt bargain between Verres and the packed jury).

42 19 (SECT. 40.) iam vero, and finally (introducing the climax of all). — illam, i.e. the one described in the passage hoc factum esse, etc.

42 21 discoloribus signis: see note on color, p. 34, l. 16. The case referred to was one in which Hortensius was counsel.

42 23 acturum esse, will attend to (i.e. officially, as ædile: cf. the use of agere, above).

42 24 (CHAP. XIV.) In this chapter Cicero reaches the climax of his accusations and insinuations against Hortensius, and at the same time makes a clever transition to the case in hand (l. 28), having worked up to his main point, which he proceeds to state with great force: that it is not Verres that is on trial, but the court itself.

42 28 hominem, i.e. Hortensius. — cuius: obj. gen.

42 30 secum . . . agi, he was doing very well (see Vocab. under ago).

42 31 in rem suam, into his own pocket. — patronis: see note, Rosc. Am., sect. 4, p. 3, l. 17.

43 3 (SECT. 41.) quod, at which (with commoveri, l. 6): cf. § 238, b (); cf. B. 176, 2; G. 333, 1; H. 378, 2 (416, 2); H. & B. .

43 4 apud Glabrimonem, i.e. in the preliminary proceedings. — reicundis iudicibus (locat. abl.), at the time of challenging (making up the jury).

43 6 fore uti, that the result would be.

43 8 tolleretur, should be abolished (purp. clause with legatos mitterent, which is equiv. to a verb of requesting).

43 14 victoriae, i.e. in the courts. They could endure it if a man stole only enough to satisfy his own avarice (sibi ac liberis suis), but they cannot afford to be robbed of enough besides to secure him an acquittal by bribery, if guilty (nocentissimi victoriae). Cf. the similar argument in Burke's Opening Speech on the Impeachment of Warren Hastings: "If, from any appearance of chicane in the court, justice should fail, all men will say, 'Better there were no courts at all.'"

43 20 (SECT. 42.) animo: abl. of means. — maiore . . . odio: abl. of quality.

Sects. 43–50. Sudden and powerful appeal to the jurors to save the senatorial courts from present infamy and threatened destruction.

43 24 (SECT. 43.) loco, point (raised in his argument).

43 29 contemnimur: Cicero uses the first person to include himself as a member of the Senate.

43 32 (SECT. 44.) tribuniciam potestatem: referring chiefly to the power of the tribunes to try criminal cases before the comitia tributa; this power, greatly abridged by Sulla, had been restored by a law of Pompey early in this year, B.C. 70.

43 33 verbo, in name; re vera, in fact; illam, the tribunician power (because this was a check on the power of the Senators).

44 1 Catulum: Q. Lutatius Catulus was the best and most eminent man of the aristocracy.

44 2 fugit, has escaped.

44 3 referente, consulting [the Senate]: the technical expression for bringing a matter before the Senate for action.

44 4 rogatus: each Senator in turn was asked his opinion (sententiam) by the consul, or other presiding officer; cf. hos sententiam rogo, Cat. i., sect. 9.

44 5 patres conscriptos: see note on Cat. i., sect. 9, p. 103, l. 6.

44 8 fuisse desideraturos (the regular way of expressing the cont. to fact apodosis in indir. disc.), would have missed; § 337, b, 2 (); B. 321, A. 2; G. 656, N.²; H. 527, iii (647); H. & B. .

44 9 (SECT. 45.) contionem habuit, made a speech: contio means, strictly, an assembly called for the purpose of listening to discussion merely (so in l. 12, below). — ad urbem, i.e. in the Campus Martius, not in the city. Pompey was elected in his absence, and while still clothed with the military imperium: he could not therefore enter the city to meet the citizens, but called them to him outside the walls.

44 10 ubi, in which.

44 12 in eo, at that point (properly on that point).

44 16 suam by its emphatic position gives the force of the English, what THEY desired.

44 20 (SECT. 46.) religione, regard for oath.

44 21 tribuniciam, i.e. the law referred to in the note on sect. 44. — unum, one, it is true; but since he was a man of no means at all (vel tenuissimum), his conviction was no proof of the integrity of the courts. The present trial will afford the people the criterion they wish.

44 29 (SECT. 47.) nihil sit, etc., i.e. this is simply a case of guilt and money: there are no political or other disturbing influences. To acquit him, then, will be to admit that you were bribed.

44 31 gratia, personal popularity.

45 1 (SECT. 48.) agam, conduct.

45 2 res, facts. — manifestas: a technical word, denoting direct proof, not circumstantial evidence.

45 3 a vobis . . . contendere, urge upon you.

45 6 eorum, i.e. of the defence.

45 8 (SECT. 49.) vos: opposed to former juries, which have occasioned the scandal.

45 9 huic ordini: dat. of agent; § 232, a (); B. 189, 2; G. 354; H. 388, 1 (431); H. & B.

45 10 post haec, etc., i.e. since the reorganization of the courts by Sulla (see note on Rosc. Am., sect. 1).

45 11 utimur, have. — splendore, personal distinction, from wealth and exploits; dignitate, dignity, from rank and office.

45 12 si . . . offensum, if there is any slip (a euphemism).

45 17 (SECT. 50.) opto, pray. (Observe the adroit union of compiment and threat in this passage, which at the same time forms the transition to the appeal to the praetor presiding.

Sects. 51, 52. Appeal to Glabrio, the presiding praetor, to prevent bribery.

45 28 (SECT. 51.) is: referring to the Senate. — iudicia: abl. of means.

45 30 qui sis, what sort of man you are.

46 1 reddere, pay back, — fac . . . veniat: § 331, f, R. (); cf. B. 295, 8; G. 553, 1 (end); H. 499, 2 (565, 4); H. & B.

46 2 legis Aciliae: this (probably B.C. 101) provided that there should be neither ampliatio (further hearing) nor comperendinatio (see note on sect. 34, p. 40, l. 18) in cases of repetundae. All earlier laws were superseded by the Cornelian law of Sulla.

46 4 (SECT. 52.) summae auctoritates, strongest influences, especially family traditions, etc. To the Roman mind an auctor, in this sense, was a pattern for imitation.

46 5 quae . . . non sinant: best regarded as a purpose clause; cf. § 320, N. (); H. & B.

46 11 ut ne quis, etc.: § 319, a, N. (); G. 545, R.¹; H. 499, 1; H. & B. .

46 14 nocenti reo, etc., for the accused, if guilty, his great wealth has had more weight to increase (lit. towards) the suspicion of guilt than (to secure) a means of safety.

Sects. 53–56. Cicero states his plan for preventing delay. He will introduce his witnesses at once, without preliminary argument. Brief statement of the charges against Verres. End.

46 17 (SECT. 53.) mihi certum est, for my part (emph.) I am resolved. — non committere, not to allow (in the weak sense of letting it occur by mistake or fault). — ut . . . mutetur, to be changed; § 332, e (); G. 553, 1; cf. H. 498, ii, N.² (566, 1); H. & B. . — nobis (eth. dat.), our.

46 19 servi, etc.: Hortensius and Metellus (sects. 25, 27), while consuls elect, had sent for the Sicilians, but of course without any authority to enforce their coming. Cicero suggests that, if the case is put off till the next year, the summons may be repeated, this time by means of lictors. Each consul was attended by twelve of these officers, who had the power of arresting and coercing (see Manil. Law, note on sect. 32, p. 81, l. 15).

46 23 ius suum, their [lost] rights.

46 24 eorum: this word suggests in a skilfully vague way that Verres, the Metelli, and Hortensius are all in the same conspiracy, as it were, to rob the Sicilians, Verres having used his imperium to carry out the actual robbery, the others using theirs to protect him by intimidating the victims.

46 27 (SECT. 54.) nobis responderi, i.e. the argument for the defence to be made.

46 28 adducta sit: § 342 (); B. 324, 1; G. 663, 1; H. 529, ii (652); H. & B. ; if this were not dependent on responderi, it would be fut. perf. ind.

46 30 comitiorum, ludorum: the trial came just between the elections and Pompey's votive games (sect. 31).

46 31 censendi causā, on account of the census-taking (registration). At this time censors were in office, for the first time since Sulla's domination: they were holding a registration of property and voters, at which citizens from all parts of Italy were obliged to report. The importance of proceeding with the trial while Rome was thus filled with citizens and provincials is obvious.

46 32 vestrum, nostram (mine), and omnium (next page) are predicate after esse (p. 47, l. 2).

47 1 quid agatur (ind. quest.) depends on the verbal noun scientiam, as the next clause does on memoriam.

47 2 omnium, i.e. not the inhabitants of Rome alone.

47 3 (SECT. 55.) principes: the two distinguished brothers, L. and M. Lucullus.

47 5 ita testis constituam, etc.: this is the criminum ratio (sect. 19, l. 14). Cicero's plan appears to be so to arrange his witnesses that their examination shall make the usual long introductory accusatio unnecessary. He will, he says, produce his witnesses in such an order and with such introduction in each case as to bring out the crimen totum in the course of these proceedings. When he has explained what he expects to prove in a given instance, he will immediately bring forward the appropriate witnesses, and so on till the whole case is in.

47 6 crimen totum, the impeachment as a whole; crimen (below), the special charge of extortion (stated formally in the next section), the only charge for which Verres was really on trial.

47 10 dantur, are offered. — in singulas res, to each point.

47 11 illis, the counsel for the defence.

47 13 altera actione, i.e. after the comperendinatio: in this sense the speeches of the Accusatio are correctly called Actio Secunda (see note above).

47 16 haec (referring forward to sect. 56), etc., this is all the Accusatio there will be in the first Action.

47 19 (SECT. 56.) quadringentiens [centena milia] sestertium, 40,000,000 sestertii, = $2,000,000 (nearly): § 379 (); G. p. 493; H. 647, iv, 1 (757); H. & B.

47 23 habuissimus: cont. to fact protasis regularly retained, without change of mood or tense, in indir. disc.; § 337, b (); B. 321, B; G. 659; H. 527, iii (647); H. & B. ; the apodosis is opus fuisse for opus fuit, there would have been no need: § 308, c (); B. 304, 3, a; G. 597, R.³ a; H. 476, 4 (525, 1); H. & B.

47 25 Dixi, I have done: a common formal ending.

THE PLUNDER OF SYRACUSE

Sects. 1, 2. Contrast between the treatment of Syracuse by the conqueror Marcellus in time of war and its treatment by Verres, the governor, in time of peace.

PAGE 48. LINE 3. (SECT. 1.) aliquando, at last, implying impatience, here assumed as a kind of apology to his hearers for the length of his account.

48 5 Marcello: M. Claudius Marcellus, of a noble plebeian family (all the other families of the Claudian gens were patrician), was the ablest general the Romans had in the early years of the Second Punic War, but illiterate and cruel. His capture of Syracuse was in B.C. 212. He was killed in battle B.C. 208.

The contrast in sect. 1 is a brilliant one: nevertheless, the orator exaggerates, as on so many occasions. "Not only did Marcellus stain his military honor by permitting a general pillage of the wealthy mercantile city, in the course of which Archimedes and many other citizens were put to death; but the Roman Senate lent a deaf ear to the complaints which the Syracusans afterwards presented regarding that celebrated general, and neither returned to individuals their property nor restored to the city its freedom." (Mommsen.)

48 8 imperatoris: this title, properly belonging to every holder of the imperium, was by usage assumed by the commander only after his first considerable victory. — cohortem, train of courtiers, etc.: the provincial magistrates, representing the Roman imperium, had almost a royal suite, as well as other insignia of royalty.

48 12 (SECT. 2.) omitto: a good example of the rhetorical device known as praeteritio. — locis, i.e. in the other speeches of the Accusatio.

48 13 forum: every ancient town had its central market-place or square (forum, ἀγορά), an open space, used for trading, public assemblies, and the administration of justice. The same feature exists in European towns at the present day.

49 4 clausus fuisset: Marcellus had been obliged to starve out the city. — Cilicium: Cilicia was the chief seat of the organized bands of pirates who ruled the Mediterranean at this time.

49 10 illis rebus, i.e. the plunder of temples, etc.

Sects. 3-5. Situation and topography of Syracuse.

49 11 (SECT. 3.) maximam: the circuit of its walls was about 180 stadia, = more than 20 miles.

49 13 ex omni aditu limits praeclaro ad aspectum.

49 14 in aedificatione, etc., i.e. enclosed by the buildings of the city. Ancient harbors (as at Athens) were often at a considerable distance.

FIG. 6

49 16 coniunguntur: Ortygia (or Insula), the site of the original town, had an independent harbor on each side connected by a narrow channel. This channel is the exitus mentioned.

50 2 (SECT. 4.) Hieronis: Hiero II, king of Syracuse (B.C. 270 to about 216), who was during most of his reign a steadfast ally of Rome.

50 5 Dianae: the quail, ὄρυξ (whence the name Ortygia), was sacred to Diana (Artemis). — istius, i.e. of Verres.

50 7 Arethusa: for the myth of Arethusa and Alpheus, see Ovid, Met. v. 573-641; Gayley, Classic Myths. For view of the fountain, see Virgil's Eclogues, p. 29.

50 10 (SECT. 5.) Achradina, the plain and table-land north of Ortygia.

50 11 prytaneum: the building in which the city was conceived to have its home. Here was the hearth, sacred to Vesta, whence colonists carried the sacred fire to kindle a new hearth in the prytaneum of their new home. It was also used for courts of justice, public banquets, etc. Such public buildings were usually grouped round the forum in the centre of the city.

50 13 urbis, i.e. Achradina. — perpetua, running its whole length.

50 14 continentur, are lined in continuous rows.

50 16 gymnasium: the place for exercise and baths, with porticos, groves, and halls.

50 19 coaedificata, built up. — Neapolis, i.e. "the new city." — quam ad summam, at the highest point of which.

Sects. 6, 7. Marcellus, the conqueror at Syracuse: compare Verres, the governor.

51 4 (SECT. 6.) pulchritudinem: the English would put it less abstractly,—this beautiful city.

51 8 in, in respect to.—habuit victoriae rationem, had regard for the right of victory.

51 10 deportare: a Roman custom, imitated in the nineteenth century by Napoleon.—possent, subj. of characteristic.—humanitatis, the part of humanity.

51 15 (SECT. 7.) Honoris, etc.: the worship of abstractions was a characteristic of the Roman religion. Marcellus restored the temple of Honor and built the temple of Virtus; the two were so connected that in common parlance they were referred to as a single edifice.

51 16 in aedibus, i.e. in his own house in town.

51 18 ornamento, i.e. as being free from stolen treasures.

51 19 deum nullum: translate, in order to keep the emphasis of the position, of the gods not one (i.e. not a single statue).

FIG. 7.—VIEW OF MODERN SYRACUSE

51 ²¹ comparetis, i.e. in renown and in personal character.

51 ²² pacem cum bello, etc.: implying that the administration of Verres in time of peace was worse than the armed capture by Marcellus. — forum et iuris dictionem, law and justice: the forum is mentioned as being the place where the prætor administered justice; iuris dictio was his special function (see note on Verres, i., sect. 12, p. 32, l. 13).

Sects. 8-17. Details of the robberies of Verres.

52 ¹ (SECT. 8.) aedis Minervae: the illustration shows how this ancient temple of Minerva in Syracuse has been made over into a church.

52 ⁴ tamen in bello: translate though in war, still, etc. The particle tamen ("still") often suggests a concession ("although"), not expressed, but loosely implied in the context or the circumstances: here the implied concession is "though the rights of an enemy in war are unlimited." — religionum, things sacred. — consuetudinis, i.e. things hallowed by use.

52 ⁶ Agathocli: tyrant of Syracuse, B.C. 317-289.

(Fig. 8, a coin of Agathocles, shows the head of Persephone, and, on the reverse, a figure of Victory erecting a trophy.)

52 ⁹ visendum: see Manil., sect. 40, p. 85, l. 6, note.

52 ¹⁰ profana fecissent: the Romans had a formula by which they called away (evocare) and gained over to their side the tutelary deities of any cities they were besieging. Of course, the temples of these gods then lost all their sanctity, and became profane buildings. With the same idea the true name of Rome and that of its tutelary divinity were said to be kept as a mystery, lest they should become known to an enemy, who might thus disarm the city of its protector. Notwithstanding this doctrine, the Romans were often, as in the case of Marcellus, prevented by religious feeling (religione) from violating the sacred edifices of conquered cities. Often, too, they transferred the worship of the deities in question to Rome. On the whole idea, cf. Æneid, ii. 351, and note.

53 ¹ iam belongs with sacra religiosaque.

53 ⁶ (SECT. 9.) id quod, what.

53 ⁹ deberet: subj. of characteristic.

FIG. 9

53 13 in quibus erant, upon which were represented.

53 16 cognitione formarum, acquaintance with their features.

53 18 tamen: see note on

p. 52, l. 4.

53 20 (SECT. 10.) valvis: such ornamentation may be seen in a mediæval example in Fig. 9 (doors of the Cathedral at Pisa).

53 23 tam . . . cupidum, that I am so eager (in appos. with quod).

53 30 illi, i.e. the Greeks, as being over-fond of art. The Romans were inclined to look down upon culture and the fine arts as being less manly than politics and war; cf. the famous passage in the Æneid, vi. 846-853.

54 2 argumenta, subjects or stories (in relief); cf. Æneid, vi. 20, and note.

54 3 (SECT. II.) Gorgonis: the head of Medusa, a favorite subject of ancient art. See Fig. 10, from an ancient marble mask.

54 6 bullas, i.e. knobs, similar to those in Fig. 11.

54 11 in hoc nomine, at this item (i.e. wondering why Verres should have taken these).

54 12 commoveri, were surprised.

54 13 satis esset, i.e. they were only curiosities. Any natural object which was, in the view of the ancients, out of the common order of nature was regarded as a monstrum or prodigium, and as therefore associated in some way with the gods; hence such objects were frequently dedicated in temples.

54 16 id merely repeats hastas.

54 17 (SECT. 12.) nam explains (ironically) why he asks the last question. A passion for art might, he suggests, excuse the theft of such an object as the Sappho, but the stealing of the bamboos was a wanton sacrilege.

54 21 potius, etc., rather than this most tasteful and cultivated man. — haberet: § 268 (); B. 277; G. 265; H. 484, v (559, 4); H. & B.

54 22 nimirum (continuing the irony), of course.

54 23 nostrum, of us (emph.), opp. to Verres.

54 25 eat (hort. subj.), must go. — ad aedem Felicitatis: the temple of Felicitas was adorned with the spoils of conquered Corinth. Catulus had adorned his temple of Fortuna, and Metellus his portico, with splendid works of art.

54 27 istorum, Verres and his friends. — Tusculanum, villa at Tusculum (about 15 miles southeast of Rome) where the wealthy Romans, Hortensius among the rest, had splendid country-houses.

54 28 ornatum, i.e. as it was on festal days. — commodarit, lent: such works of art were often placed temporarily in the Forum ; cf. our modern "loan exhibitions."

54 31 operari, mere day-laborer : said in contempt of Verres' pretensions to culture. — studia, fine tastes ; delicias, luxurious pleasures (both ironical).

55 1 appositor, better fitted. — ad ferenda, etc., to carry (as a porter) than to carry off (as a connoisseur) : a sarcasm on Verres' coarse and heavy build.

55 5 (SECT. 13.) Graeculus : in contemptuous allusion to his pretence of taste. — subtiliter iudicat, is a fine connoisseur of.

55 7 nunc, now (as it is) opposed to si . . . tulisset.

56 2 (SECT. 14.) parinum (corrupt and meaningless) : the common reading is parvum ; perhaps the old conjecture Parium, of Parian marble, is best.

56 7 Libero patre : not Liber his father, but father Liber, pater being a common attribute of Liber as well as of Mars and other gods. Liberi filius (l. 6) is spurious.

56 9 (SECT. 15.) Iovem : the statue was of Ζεύς ὀψίος, god of favorable weather, identified, from some fancied resemblance, with Jupiter imperator.

FIG. 14

56 10 suo : the emphatic position continues the emphasis on Iovem.

56 13 Flamininus : T. Quinctius Flamininus (Fig. 12, from a coin), who defeated Philip of Macedon at Cynoscephalæ, B.C. 197.

56 16 in Ponti ore : the Thracian Bosphorus, the strait extending from Constantinople to the Black Sea, about 17 miles.

56 18 sua: § 196, c (); cf. B. 244, 4; G. 309, 2; II. 449, 2 (503, 2); H. & B. — Capitolio: the Capitol, or Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, had three cellae, or chapels, sacred to the Capitolian triad, Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva. This was now the most illustrious temple, "the earthly abode," of Jupiter.

56 24 incolae, residents: i.e. persons of foreign birth who made Syracuse their home, without having obtained citizenship; advenae, visitors.

56 28 (SECT. 16.) adventu, abl. of cause.

57 2 (SECT. 17.) mensas Delphicas: tables with three legs, like the Delphic tripod (see Figs. 13, 14). — vasa Corinthia were made of a kind of bronze, of peculiar beauty and very costly.

Sects. 18–21. Robberies of works of art are especially odious to men of Greek blood.

57 17 (SECT. 18.) levia et contemnenda: cf. note on p. 53, l. 30.

57 22 fanorum, shrines: the word indicates the consecrated spot rather than the temple or altar erected upon it.

57 27 (SECT. 19.) nisi forte: introducing, as usual, an absurd supposition.

57 28 desierunt, ceased, i.e. by the transference of the courts to the Senators.

58 2 Crasso: L. Licinius Crassus, the famous orator, and Quintus Scævola, pontifex maximus, the famous jurist and statesman, were close friends, and colleagues in nearly every office. They were curule ædiles, B.C. 103, and gave the first exhibition of lion-fights. The splendor of their ædileship was the work of Crassus, a man of elegant and luxurious tastes, while Scævola was moderate and simple in his habits. — Claudio: probably a brother of Claudia, the wife of Tiberius Gracchus. In his ædileship, B.C. 99, he exhibited fights of elephants.

58 4 commercium: Crassus and Claudius would have bought such objects of art if anybody could have done it.

58 5 fuisse, sc. commercium.

58 9 (SECT. 20.) referri, be entered, has for subject pretio . . . abalienasse.

58 12 rebus istis, things of that sort.

58 13 apud illos, i.e. the Greeks generally.

58 19 (SECT. 21.) The cities referred to in this section were all centres of Greek art or celebrated for the possession of some masterpiece. Reginos: Rhegium, Reggio, was a very ancient Greek city, at the point of Italy nearest Sicily. It was a colony of Chalcis, probably founded in the eighth century B.C., and became a Roman municipium after the Social War, B.C. 91-90.

58 20 merere velle, would take. — illa, that famous.

58 21 Tarentinos: Tarentum was the largest Greek city in Italy, a colony of Sparta, founded in the eighth century B.C., subjugated by Rome just after the invasion of Pyrrhus, B.C. 272.

58 24 Cnidios . . . Coös: observe the chiasm.

58 28 buculam: the celebrated bronze cow of Myron. — longum est, it would be tedious: § 311, c (); B. 304, 3; G. 254, R.¹; H. 476, 5 (525, 2); H. & B.

CRUCIFIXION OF A ROMAN CITIZEN

PAGE 59. LINE 1. (SECT. 1.) nunc, opposed to the time of the actio prima, which he has just referred to. — uno genere, this one class of crimes. — tot horas . . . dicam: § 276, a (); B. 259, 4; G. 230; H. 467, iii, 2 (533); H. & B.

59 5 tenerem: for tense, see § 287, i (); B. 268, 7, b; G. 511, R.²; H. 495, i (547, 1); H. & B.

59 6 de tanta re, etc.: Cicero has now arrived at the climax of his accusation: the case of Gavius is so outrageous that it would require all his powers to characterize it. But, he says, he has already used the strongest language of which he is master in describing other and less heinous crimes, and he has not attempted to keep the attention of the jurors by variety in the charges. What, then, can he do to make this horrible case, the most abominable of the crimes of Verres, sufficiently impressive? There is but one thing left to do: he will tell the bare facts, which need no eloquence to emphasize them.

59 7 rem (emphat.), the bare facts. — in medio, before you.

59 10 (SECT. 2.) in illo numero: Cicero has been describing the treatment of a number of fugitives from the insurrectionary army of Sertorius in Spain who had made their way to Sicily after the death of Sertorius, B.C. 72, and the overthrow of his faction by Pompey.

59 12 lautumiis, the stone-pits (ancient quarries) at Syracuse, used as a prison. The illustration shows the present condition of that part of the lautumiae known as Dionysius' Ear. — Messanam (now Messina), the point of Sicily nearest Italy. Messina, founded as a Greek colony in the eighth century B.C., was at this time one of the very few privileged towns (civitates foederatae) of Sicily. It was specially favored by Verres, and, according to Cicero, was an accomplice of his iniquities. Fig. 15 shows a representation of the pharos (lighthouse) of Messana from a coin of Sex. Pompey; the reverse has a representation of Scylla.

FIG. 15

59 14 Reginorum : Rhegium is almost in sight of Messana.

59 15 odore, breath.

59 18 rectā, sc. viā.

59 21 (SECT. 3.) in praetorio, the house (or official residence) of the praetor.

59 23 adiutricem, etc. : § 184, b (); B. 169, 3; G. 321; H. 363, I (393, I); H. & B.

59 24 magistratum Mamertinum, a magistrate of Messana : the city of Messana had been treacherously taken possession of by a body of mercenaries, who called themselves Mamertini (children of Mars), about B.C. 282. Though the name of the city was not changed, its citizens were from this time called Mamertini. See cut in text, which shows the head of Ares.

60 10 (SECT. 4.) expectabant, were on the watch to see. — quo tandem, how far : tandem (as also nam) gives a sense of wonder to the question.

FIG. 16

VIEW OF PALERMO.

60 13 expediri, to be got ready, i.e. by untying the fascēs (rods and axe), which were the badge of the prætor's imperium.

60 14 meruisse (sc. stipendia), served as a soldier.

60 15 Panhormi (all harbor), the present Palermo: see Fig. 16. — negotiaretur, i.e. as head or agent of some house engaged in speculation (cf. Verr. i., sect. 20). This kind of business was generally carried on by Roman equites, and on a large scale.

60 17 fugitivorum, runaway slaves, who had been concerned in the frightful servile war of Spartacus, B.C. 73–71.

60 19 esset: subj. of characteristic.

60 21 (SECT. 5.) caedebatur: observe the emphatic position. This imperf. and those following make a lively description of the scene instead of a mere statement of the facts.

61 1 audiebatur, could be heard; § 277, g (); G. 233.

61 3 commemoratione, claim.

61 7 pestem, accursed thing.

61 10 (SECT. 6.) lex Porcia: this forbade the scourging of citizens. See Fig. 17, a coin struck by a member of the Porcian family: the reverse commemorates this law; the figure at the right is a lictor with rods. — leges Semproniae (of Caius Gracchus): these gave Roman citizens the right of appeal to the judgment of the whole people in capital cases, even against the military imperium. In civil life this right had existed ever since the foundation of the republic. Cf., in English law, the right of trial “by one’s peers.”

61 12 tribunicia potestas: see note on Verr. i., sect. 44 (p. 43, l. 32).

61 18 non inhibebant: cf. note on audiebatur (l. 1).

61 22 (SECT. 7.) ut (interrog.), how.

61 25 Glabrionem: subj. of facere.

61 26 ut . . . dimitteret: result clause, in appos. with id.

61 27 consilium, jury: he feared that the lynch law would get the start of a legal verdict.

61 28 repetisse, inflicted (lit. exacted, punishment being regarded as a forfeit).

61 29 veritus esset has for its subject populus Romanus. Observe the exactness of tense-relations expressed by the plup. and the periphrastic esset persoluturus, was not likely to pay.

62 2 (SECT. 8.) quid . . . sit, what will happen to you.

62 3 Gavium istum, that G. of yours (i.e. the G. whom you misrepresent).—repentinum, suddenly discovered.

62 5 neque, etc., and this I will show, etc. Notice that in Latin the connective attracts the negative whenever it can.

62 6 aliquis: Gavius was a very common name in South Italy.

62 8 ad arbitrium tuum, at your discretion (i.e. as many as you like).

62 11 sero, too late (for you, but not too late for the court).—iudices, obj. of doceant.

62 15 (SECT. 9.) patronis: see note on Rosc. Am., p. 3, l. 17.—istuc ipsum, that single fact.

62 17 nuper tu, etc.: of course an imaginary incident, since this oration was never delivered.

62 19 ideo, for this reason, i.e. quod . . . quaereret.

62 20 iam, i.e. after you have said that.

62 24 ex eo genere: explained by the clause non qui . . . dicerent (characteristic).

63 2 (SECT. 10.) induatur, etc.: § 111, a (); B. 175, 2, d; G. 218; H. 377 (407); H. & B. ; tie himself up and strangle himself (as in a noose); cf. our "give the man rope enough and he'll hang himself."

63 3 qui esset, what he was (i.e. whether a citizen or not).

63 5-8 si . . . ducerere, quid . . . clamitares, etc.: in this past condition, cont. to fact, the imperf. is used instead of the pluperf., because the supposition is general rather than particular; § 308, a (); G. 597, R.¹; H. 510, N.² (579, 1); H. & B. ; if you, caught, etc., had ever been in the hands of men who were dragging you off to punishment, what other cry would you have raised than, "I am a Roman citizen"?

63 11 profuisset, would have availed, i.e. in the case supposed (as defined in the preceding sentence): thus profuisset involves its own protasis; § 311 (); B. 305, 1; G. 600, 1; H. 507, N.⁷; H. & B. . It is a complete proposition, which is made conditional by si and is made the protasis of a new apod., potuit, l. 15; § 311, d (); § 311, e (); B. 304, 3; G. 597, R.⁸, a; H. 511, 1, N.⁸ (583); H. & B.

63 12 qui, concessive; cum, causal.

63 14 usurpatione, claim (lit. using the word).

63 18 (SECT. 11.) quo = ad quos.—cognitoribus, vouchers.

63 20 legum existimationis, obj. gen. with periculo.

63 21 continentur, are restrained.

63 22 sermonis . . . societate, by fellowship in language, rights, and interests.

64 2 (SECT. 12.) tolle, a sort of protasis: § 310, b (); B. 305, 2; G. 598; H. 487, 3 (560, 3); H. & B. ; the apod. is iam . . . praecluseris (ll. 6-9, below).

64 5 quod velit (subj. of integral part), any he pleases.

64 6 quod . . . ignoret, because one may not know him.

64 7 liberas civitates: the allied states in the provinces, which were not strictly under the jurisdiction of the praetors.

64 9 praecluseris, fut. perf.

64 12 adservasses, you might have kept. — custodiis: abl. of means.

64 14 cognosceret, should he know; equiv. to a protasis with si; § 310, b (); B. 305, 2; G. 598; H. 507, iii, 1 (573, N.); H. & B. 000.

64 15 si ignoraret: Cicero here ironically lays down, under the form of a calm and reasonable alternative, the principle that Verres might crucify any Roman citizen whom he did not personally know and who could not furnish a rich man to identify him.

64 16 hoc iuris: § 216, a, 3 (); B. 201, 2; G. 369; H. 397, 3 (442, 1); H. & B. .

64 18 ut . . . tolleretur: clause of purpose.

64 21 (SECT. 13.) hostis, i.e. by his acts he has virtually declared himself the open enemy of the state as if he were a foreign power making war on the rights of Roman citizens (hence hostis rather than inimicus). — non illi: both words are emphatic, — it is not to this person (in particular) but to, etc., that you were hostile.

64 22 quid enim attinuit, etc., for what did it have to do with the case that you should order, etc.: why should you have ordered, etc., unless by these gratuitous severities you wished to show your hatred of the very name of citizen?

64 25 fretum, the strait of Messina.

64 32 divisa, thus divided.

65 1 alumnus, foster-child, i.e. adopted citizen.

65 4 (SECT. 14.) Observe the double climax: facinus, scelus, parricidium; vincire, verberare, necare. For the crucifixion of a citizen Cicero can find no word strong enough; hence the summit of the climax is reached in quid dicam?

65 5 parricidium: for the horror with which this crime was regarded by the Romans, see Rosc. Am., sects. 28, 29.

65 14 in comitio: i.e. publicly in Rome and in the very centre of Roman freedom and Roman life. The comitium was an open space north of the Forum, on higher ground (see Plan of Forum, top); it was used for the most ancient comitia, the curiata (in which the people were assembled by the thirty hereditary curiae), for hearing lawsuits, and for contiones. The curia, or Senate-house, fronted toward the comitium.—quod, i.e. that point which.

65 15 celebritate, i.e. as being a crowded thoroughfare.

65 16 potuit, sc. fieri.

65 18 praetervectione, etc., on the track of all who sail to and fro (by the Strait of Messina, the necessary route to Greece).

THE MANILIAN LAW

ARGUMENT

CHAP. I. Exordium. Why this is Cicero's first appearance before a political assembly. — Narratio. 2. Statement of the case: Mithridates and Tigranes have invaded the Roman domain. This war is demanded by the dignity and safety of the State. — Confirmatio. I. Character of the war. — 3. Ill success of the First and Second Mithridatic Wars. — 4. Strength of the enemy. — 5. Present tameness of the Roman people contrasted with their ancient pride. The allies, whose safety is at stake, demand Pompey as commander. — 6. The chief revenues are in peril, endangered by mere suspicion of calamity. — 7. Financial crisis at Rome (general ruin would result from disaster to the publicani). — II. 8. Magnitude of the war. Lucullus achieved great success in his campaign. — 9. But the war is still a great one: Mithridates is not subdued; our army has suffered reverses; Lucullus has been removed. — III. 10. Who then should be appointed? Military experience of Pompey. — 11, 12. His successes, especially in the Piratic War. — 13, 14. He has all the qualities of a general, including not only courage, but moral qualities: blamelessness, humanity, self-restraint, easy manners. — 15. His prestige and influence, especially as derived from the Piratic War. — 16. His special reputation in the East, largely resulting from his brilliant fortune. — 17. Moreover, he is on the spot. — Confutatio. Objection of Hortensius, that all power ought not to be given to one man. — 18. Answered by facts as to the result of the Gabinian law. — 19. Brilliant success of this law (incidentally, Gabinius should be assigned to Pompey as legatus). — 20. Objection of Catulus, that the proposition is against precedent. —

21. Answered by referring to other violations of precedent in Pompey's case. — 22, 23. Appeal to the people against these objections. Pompey alone can retrieve the Roman reputation. Many leading men favor the Manilian Law. — Peroratio. 24. Cicero supports the law purely from devotion to the commonwealth.

The Oration for the Manilian Law is a famous example of a deliberative oration constructed on a systematic rhetorical plan.

- I. Exordium (introduction): Chap. 1.
- II. Narratio (statement of the case): Chap. 2.
- III. Confirmatio (affirmative argument): Chaps. 3 (sect. 6)–17 (sect. 50).
 1. The character of the war: Chaps. 3 (sect. 6)–7.
 2. The importance of the war: Chaps. 8, 9.
 3. The selection of a commander: Chaps. 10–17 (sect. 50).
- IV. Confutatio (answers to objections): Chaps. 17 (sect. 51)–23.
- V. Peroratio (peroration).

The oration was delivered in a contio or public meeting of Roman citizens held not for voting, but for debate or address merely. A contio could be called by any magistrate who had a matter to lay before the people, and was held regularly in the Comitium or the Forum. After a rogatio (proposition of a law) had been offered, such a meeting was regularly convened in order that the voters might hear the arguments on both sides. Later the comitia voted on the bill, Yes or No.

Thus the present speech in many respects resembled our modern political addresses on important public measures, like the tariff or the currency. It has, however, an official character.

I. EXORDIUM (CHAP. I)

Sects. 1–3. Chap. I. This is Cicero's first appearance before a political assembly. Hitherto he has given all his time to defending his friends as a lawyer. He rejoices that in this his first political oration he has a subject on which any one, however unpractised, cannot fail to speak well, — the valor and ability of Pompey.

67 1 (SECT. 1.) For a discussion of the structure of the opening period, see general Introd. p. xlvii. — frequens conspectus vester, the sight of you in full assembly.

67 2 hic locus, the Rostra (Fig. 18, from a coin). The scanty remains of the rostra may be seen at the left of the Temple of Concord in the cut, p. xi. — ad agendum, for public business: i.e. among the many duties of a magistrate there is none more dignified (amplissimus) than this of addressing the whole people in a political assembly; agere cum populo was the technical expression for transacting business in the comitia or a contio.

FIG. 18

67 3 ornatissimus, honorable (of private glory as an orator). — Quirites, fellow-citizens: the name by which the Romans were addressed when acting in a civil capacity. — hoc aditu, this avenue (i.e. addressing the people on political questions).

67 4 optimo cuique, i.e. to such as the presiding magistrate would permit, for only these had a right to speak in a contio.

67 5 rationes, plan: the plural indicates the details of the plan, i.e. the particular considerations that determine a general course of conduct.

68 1 cum (temporal), while; § 323, 2 (); B. 288, 1, b; G. 585; H. 521, 2 (600, ii. 1); H. & B. .

68 2 auctoritatem: the act of speaking in a contio indicated that the speaker was a proper person to advise the people, and hence it would confer auctoritas (weight, prestige). — attingere, aspire to.

68 3 perfectum ingenio, perfected by force of intellect: i.e. the fruit of fully developed mental power.

68 4 elaboratum, carefully wrought (such, therefore, as needed more practice than youth could give).

68 5 amicorum temporibus, exigencies of my friends. A Roman lawyer was not regarded as doing a service for hire, but was expected to defend his friends gratuitously. He was, indeed, prohibited from receiving pay; but, though no bargain was made, the obliged party was expected to give a liberal present, in some form or other, to his patronus.

68 5 (SECT. 2.) neque . . . et: here the first clause is virtually concessive; we may render while . . . at the same time.

68 7 caste, with clean hands; integre, in good faith (toward the client).

68 8 iudicio, i.e. their action in electing him. — fructum, i.e. the several grades of office he had already filled: he was now praetor.

68 9 dilationem, adjournment. There were many things which could break up an assembly and put off the business, especially unfavorable auguries, the announcement of which was a favorite device of politicians. If an election was thus interrupted by adjournment, the votes already taken were null and void and the whole proceeding had to be gone through with again. The comitia at which Cicero was chosen prætor were twice adjourned in this way, so that there were three meetings before the election was complete. At each of these Cicero was the first (primus) of the eight prætors to secure a majority, and hence he was thrice declared elected (ter renuntiatus sum). primus does not here imply a superiority in rank, for the eight prætors were regarded as colleagues and they determined their functions by lot.

68 11 quid aliis, etc.: i.e. this action of the voters showed that they approved his course of life, and was a suggestion to others how to attain similar honors.

68 12 nunc, opposed to the time referred to in sect. 1.

68 14 ad agendum, for speaking (cf. note on l. 2, above).

68 15 forensi usu: the courts were held in the Forum.

68 18 quoque, i.e. to forensic as well as to military or political activity.

68 19 (SECT. 3.) atque (the strongest of the and's), and further. — illud (nom.) laetandum: the construction illud laetor changed to the passive; § 238, b (); cf. B. 176, 2; G. 333, 1, N.¹; H. 371, iii (405); H. & B.

68 20 mihi, following insolita.

68 21 ratione, manner.

68 22 oratio, language; orationis (l. 24), argument (abstract from oro, in its original sense of to speak).

68 23 virtute, good qualities generally.

II. NARRATIO (§§ 4-5)

Sects. 4-5. Present state of the Mithridatic War. A leader is necessary, and there is but one leader fit to cope with the situation.

Observe that these two sections, though apparently a mere statement of facts, are so expressed as to contain, in brief and powerful form, the substance of the whole oration. The appointment of Pompey is not a matter for argument, Cicero contends throughout the speech, but an absolute necessity: the condition of affairs demands action, and this is the only action that can avail.

68 27 (SECT. 4.) atque (cf. note on l. 19, above), and now (to come to the point). — inde, from that point.

68 29 vectigalibus ac sociis, tributaries and allies (of the latter some were tributary and others not).

68 30 relictus, i.e. before the contest was fully decided; laccessitus, only assailed, not seriously attacked. By using these words Cicero artfully prepares for the assertion which he is about to make of the need of an energetic commander.

68 31 Asiam, i.e. the province of this name, occupying the western half of Asia Minor and bordering on the dominions of Mithridates.

68 32 equitibus, etc. : keep the emphasis by changing the construction : Roman equites are daily receiving, etc.

68 33 quorum . . . occupatae, whose large properties, invested in managing your revenues, are endangered. The revenues were farmed out to societates (companies) of publicani, who were members of the equestrian order (see sect. 14).

69 2 necessitudine : Cicero was of an equestrian family.

69 4 (SECT. 5.) Bithyniae : this territory had been bequeathed to the Roman republic by Nicomedes III, B.C. 74.

69 5 Ariobarzanis : king of Cappadocia, which had been overrun by Mithridates.

69 7 Lucullum : Lucullus was related to both branches of the family of Metellus, and had married Clodia, sister of the notorious Publius Clodius. It was chiefly this mischievous demagogue, who was serving as one of his officers, that stirred up the dissensions and mutinies which robbed Lucullus of the fruits of his victories. — discedere, is on the point of withdrawing. — huic qui successerit, his successor, Glabrio.

69 8 non satis paratum, not adequately furnished — an understatement : Glabrio had shown himself thoroughly incompetent, but Cicero was on good terms with him. This was the Glabrio who had presided over the court in the case of Verres.

69 9 sociis, i.e. Asiatics; civibus, Romans engaged in business in Asia.

69 10 imperatorem (in pred. appos. with unum), as commander.

III. CONFIRMATIO (§§ 6-50)

Having briefly stated the facts (in the narratio, sects. 4, 5), Cicero asks what is to be done (sect. 6). His discussion of this question falls under three heads: (1) the nature of the war (sects. 6-19); (2) its magnitude (sects. 20-26); (3) the choice of a commander (sects. 27-50). In the first and second divisions he represents the nature and magnitude of the war in such a way as to make the conclusion under the third head inevitable, — that Pompey must be chosen commander.

I. THE NATURE OF THE WAR (§§ 6-19)

This is considered under four heads (defined in sect. 6): there are at stake, (1) the dignity and prestige of Rome (sects. 7-11); (2) the safety of the allies (sects. 12-13); (3) the chief revenues of the state (sects. 14-16); (4) the investments of the publicani, whose embarrassment would cause a financial panic in Rome itself (sects. 17-19).

69 17 (SECT. 6.) agitur, is at stake.

69 21 certissima: the surest because Asia was the richest and most fruitful of all the provinces; hence the price paid by the publicani for the privilege of farming its taxes was always certain to be large.

69 22 quibus amissis: equiv. to a fut. protasis. — ornamenta, ornaments, i.e. "all that exalts and embellishes civilized life."

70 1 a vobis: the abl. with a is used instead of the dat. of agent because there is another dat. dependent on consulendum; § 232, N. (); B. 189, I, a; G. 355, R.; H. 388, N. (431, I); H. & B.

Sects. 7-11. The war affects both the dignity and the welfare of Rome. The massacre of Roman citizens by Mithridates is as yet unpunished. So far no Roman general has succeeded in checking his aggressions. Has the Roman spirit declined? Our ancestors were more active in taking vengeance for insult and wrong.

70 8 (SECT. 7.) civis Romanos, etc.: this massacre (B.C. 88), in which 80,000 persons perished, was intended by Mithridates as a step toward the entire expulsion of the Romans from Asia.

70 11 regnat: for tense, see § 276, a (); B. 259, 4; G. 230; H. 467, 2 (533); H. & B.

70 14 (SECT. 8.) etenim, for (you will notice).

70 17 triumphavit de: not triumphed over, but celebrated a triumph for a victory over. The word is repeated in emphatic antithesis to the clause sed . . . regnaret.

70 19 regnaret, was still a king (i.e. in possession of his kingdom). — verum tamen, but still.

70 20 quod egerunt, for what they have done: by a Latin idiom quod is here equivalent to propter id quod.

70 22 res publica, the public interest. Sulla had hastened to make an unsatisfactory peace, that he might return and restore order in Italy, which was in the power of the Marian faction.

70 23 (SECT. 9.) autem, now (in contrast to the action of the Roman generals). — reliquum, that followed.

70 ²⁷ Bosporanis, the people of Bosporus, a flourishing Grecian state, embracing the Crimea and adjoining lands.

70 ²⁹ ad eos duces, i.e. Sertorius and his comrades. Sertorius was the ablest general of the Marian faction in the Civil Wars. After the victory of Sulla, and the complete overthrow of his own party elsewhere, he continued to hold Spain, where he attempted to found a new republic, entering into alliance with Mithridates and other enemies of Rome.

71 ¹ gereretur (for fut. indic.): subj. of integral part.

71 ² de imperio, for supremacy.

71 ³ (SECT. 10.) alterius corresponds to altera, l. 6, below.

71 ⁴ firmamenti, outward support; roboris, internal strength.

71 ⁵ Cn. Pompei: Pompey and Metellus Pius conducted the war against Sertorius from B.C. 77 till B.C. 72 without being able to subdue him. In 72 Sertorius was assassinated by his lieutenant Perperna, whom Pompey had no difficulty in defeating. Cicero, it will be observed, suppresses these details, preferring to give Pompey credit, in general terms, for putting an end to "the danger from Sertorius."

71 ⁶ in altera parte, i.e. in the East.

71 ⁸ felicitati: observe the chiasitic order of the ideas, — felicitati, virtuti; culpae, fortunae. — haec extrema (an intentional euphemism), these late disasters.

71 ⁹ tribuenda, attributable. In fact the ill success of Lucullus was in great part due to the machinations of politicians at Rome; he was not properly supported by the home government.

71 ¹⁵ (SECT. 11.) mercatoribus, etc.: abl. abs. expressing cause.

71 ¹⁹ appellati, addressed. — superbius, too haughtily.

The orator is here appealing to the passions of his hearers, and his statements must be interpreted accordingly. In B.C. 148, Roman ambassadors demanded that the Achaean League give up all its recent acquisitions; at which the incensed populace insulted the ambassadors and drove them away. In the war that followed, Corinth was captured by Mummius and destroyed, while Greece was made into a province by the name of Achaia. The insult to the ambassadors was but a pretext for the war, which was, in fact, merely one act in the general Roman policy of conquest. The extinction of the "eye of Greece," too, was not from motives of vengeance, but in order to remove a powerful rival to Roman commerce.

71 21 legatum, etc. : M'. Aquilius, the person referred to, had in fact forfeited all claim to the inviolability of an ambassador by actually taking command of an army against Mithridates. He was taken prisoner and put to death (B.C. 88). Aquilius had done service to the State by suppressing the Servile War in Sicily (see Fig. 19).

Sects. 12, 13. Our suffering allies implore aid. For their own sake they beg that the command be intrusted to Pompey.

71 26 (SECT. 12.) videte ne : the Latin expresses in the form of a purpose clause ("see to it lest," etc.) what we should put in the form of an indir. quest. ("see whether it be not," etc.).

71 27 ut, as, correl. with sic. — illis, i.e. your ancestors.

71 29 non posse : subj. of sit.

71 30 quid ? a regular formula of transition, again. — quod, that ; § 333, b () ; G. 542 ; H. 540, iv, N. (588, 3) ; H. & B. — periculum ac discrimen, a dangerous crisis : the former word signifying the trial ; the latter the decision. (See Introd. p. xlv.)

72 1 Ariobarzanes : king of Cappadocia. It was the designs of Mithridates upon this kingdom that first brought him into collision with Rome. (Fig. 20 is from a fine bust of some unknown Cappadocian.)

72 6 certum, a particular. — cum : causal.

72 7 sine summo periculo, i.e. by offending Lucullus and Glabrio.

72 10 (SECT. 13.) propter, at hand. — quo : abl. of degree of difference with aegrius.

72 11 adventu ipso, by his mere coming. — maritimum, i.e. the war against the pirates, which Pompey had just finished with great glory.

72 14 ceterarum provinciarum, i.e. those assigned to Pompey by the Gabinian Law, which gave him power over the entire Mediterranean and the coasts fifty miles inland. This would not include the province of Bithynia, nor the greater part of Asia. The Manilian Law extended his power over the entire East.

72 15 quorum . . . commendetis : § 320, f (); B. 282, 3; G. 631, 1; H. 503, ii, 2 (591, 7); H. & B.

72 17 etiam si defendant : subj. of integral part.

72 19 non multum, etc.; the expression was hardly too strong for the general type of provincial governors. Cf. "The Plunder of Syracuse," sects. 1, 6, 7, where Cicero contrasts the moderation of Marcellus in time of war with the rapacity of Verres in time of peace.

Sects. 14-16. The safety of the largest and surest revenues of Rome is also at stake.

72 23 (SECT. 14.) The neatness of Cicero's transitions may be seen to good advantage in this oration. In the present section he passes by a clever turn from the safety of the allies to the safety of the revenues. Our ancestors took all possible pains to defend their allies even when they had suffered nothing themselves : shall we hesitate to defend our allies when our government has been insulted, — especially when on their safety depend our chief revenues ?

72 23 propter socios (emphat.); these wars have a place in the argument solely on account of their motive. The events referred to are the following : Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, was defeated by Scipio Asiaticus at Magnesia, B.C. 190. Philip V, king of Macedonia, was defeated by Flamininus, at Cynoscephalæ, B.C. 197. The Ætolians had helped Rome against Philip, and then joined Antiochus against her : they were obliged to submit after the battle of Magnesia. Carthage had been forced into a third war in B.C. 149, and was taken and destroyed by Scipio Æmilianus in B.C. 146.

72 28 agatur, etc., it is a question of your richest revenues. The province of Asia, like Sicily, paid as a tax the tenth of all products (decumæ). The collection of this was farmed out by the censors to companies of publicani belonging to the equestrian order. All other provinces regularly paid a stipendium, or fixed tax, which they raised themselves.

72 29 tanta, only so great. — eis, abl. with contenti. — vix contenti, i.e. they will hardly pay the costs of their own defence.

72 30 Asia : this description of Asia Minor is no longer true, for bad government and bad cultivation have exhausted its natural wealth.

72 32 pastionis, pasture land, let to publicans, who paid a tax called scriptura. — exportantur : the portoria were tolls and customs duties paid upon goods both exported and imported : the rate was $2\frac{1}{2}$, or (in Sicily) 5 per cent ad valorem.

73 8 (SECT. 15.) pecuaria, etc. : cf. the summary of the resources of Asia, p. 72, ll. 30-32.

73 10 portu, decumis, scriptura: these repeat, in inverse order, pecuaria, agri cultura, navigatio.

73 12 fructus, income (i.e. to the Romans).

73 14 (SECT. 16.) exercent, manage, refers to the societates publicanorum, who took contracts for collecting the revenues; exigunt, collect, refers to the agents and slaves who attended to the details of the collection.

73 17 familias: see note on Rosc. Am., p. 15, l. 3. The Roman slaves were not merely rude Gauls and Thracians, but educated Greeks and Asiatics. The latter served in noble families as secretaries, stewards, and tutors, and would naturally be employed by the great tax-collecting corporations as agents and servants.

73 18 saltibus, mountain pastures. Here again three classes of revenue are alluded to: scriptura (in saltibus), decumae (in agris), portoria (in portubus). Observe the art with which Cicero constantly repeats, in different order and different terms, the same detailed description of the revenues, in order to keep this important point before the minds of his hearers.

73 19 custodiis, coast-guards, stationed to prevent smuggling, at the custom-houses and toll-houses.

73 20 posse, can: for construction of posse, see § 307, d (); G.
248, R.; H. & B. ; the protasis is nisi . . . conservaritis (fut. perf.).

Sects. 17-19. The investments of the publicani and others are endangered by this war; hence there is fear of a financial crisis at Rome.

74 1 (SECT. 17.) ac ne, etc., nor must you neglect this point either.

74 2 cum essem . . . dicturus: see above, sect. 6, where the divisions of the subject are specified.

74 3 quod . . . pertinet, which bears upon, etc. The antecedent is illud.

74 5 nam et corresponds to deinde (sect. 18). Two classes are mentioned: (1) the publicani or tax-farmers, and (2) other citizens who have money invested in Asia (sect. 18).

74 6 rationes, business enterprises; copias, fortunes. — in illam provinciam, i.e. the farming of the revenues there.

74 7 ipsorum per se, for their own sake (i.e. apart from all question of the safety of the revenues).

74 8 nervos: the same figure is seen in our phrase "the sinews of war."

74 9 eum . . . ordinem, i.e. the equites: these not only farmed the taxes, but they were, in general, the capitalists and bankers of Rome.

74 11 (SECT. 18.) ex ceteris ordinibus refers to men of humbler rank who were carrying on business in Asia, as well as to Senators who had money invested (conlocatas) there.

74 13 eorum (redundant) limits partim.

74 14 humanitatis vestrae: § 214, d (); B. 198, 3; G. 366; H. 401, N.² (439, 3); H. & B. ; sapientiae is in the same construction.

74 17 etenim primum introduces the first reason why the losses of private citizens are a matter of public concern; the second reason is introduced by deinde quod (sect. 19). — illud parvi refert, etc., it is of slight consequence that we can afterwards win back by victory: § 252, a (); B. 211, 3, a; G. 379, 380; H. 408, iii (449, 3); H. & B. .

74 18 publica either agrees with vectigalia, or may be taken absolutely, omitting the doubtful word vectigalia. — his, i.e. the publicani; amissis, lost, i.e. as bidders for the revenues.

74 19 redimendi, contracting for the revenues.

74 21 (SECT. 19.) deinde: introducing another important point; general credit will invariably suffer when a large class of moneyed men are ruined. The student should remember that Rome was a great commercial centre like London to-day.

74 22 initio belli, i.e. in the First Mithridatic War.

74 23 memoria, loc. abl.; § 254, a (); G. 389; II. 425, 1, 2 (485, 1); H. & B. .

74 24 cum amiserant, when (as you remember), etc.: § 325, a (); cf. B. 288, 1, a; G. 580; H. 521, ii, 1 (601); H. & B. . — solutione . . . concidisce (brief description of a financial panic), when payment was embarrassed, credit fell. Similar panics in recent times may help us conceive the political importance of commerce in antiquity.

74 25 non enim possunt: translate (to preserve the emphasis), for it is impossible that.

74 26 ut non . . . trahant (clause of result), without dragging (lit. so as not to drag).

74 27 prohibete: for the two senses of this verb, see Vocab. (cf. also defendo).

74 28 id: § 225, a.

74 29 ratio pecuniarum, financial system.

74 30 versatur, centres. — pecuniis, finances.

74 31 illa, i.e. those in Asia; haec, i.e. at Rome.

74 32 num . . . sit, whether you ought to hesitate. — dubitandum sit, impersonal.

75 1 incumbere: the usual constr. after non dubito in this sense; § 332, g, N.² (); B. 298, b; G. 555, R.³; H. 505, i, 4; H. & B. 000, o.

75 2 fortunae, etc.: with this chapter Cicero closes the discussion "de genere belli." There is no anticlimax, for the stability of the whole Roman financial system was of course more important than either the safety of the allies or the revenues of a single province.

II. THE MAGNITUDE OF THE WAR (§§ 20–26)

Having shown, in the preceding division, that the war is necessary (i.e. that much is at stake), Cicero now proceeds to prove that it is a dangerous war (i.e. that the outcome is uncertain). To do this he needs only to sketch the history of the contest, ending with the recall of Lucullus and the appointment of Glabrio.

Sects. 20–26. Exploits of Lucullus. The war still a great one. Roman reverses and discouragement of the army. Mithridates unsubdued. Lucullus superseded by Glabrio.

75 5 (SECT. 20.) potest (emphatic position), etc., it MAY be said, i.e. in answer to the preceding arguments: of course, in order to justify the wisdom of so exceptional a measure as the Manilian Law, it was necessary to show that the war was of sufficient gravity to require the appointment of Pompey. Observe the skilful transition from the genus of the war to its magnitudo. — belli genus, i.e. the war, in its character.

75 7 elaborandum est: use the personal construction in translating.

75 12 ornatas, equipped; instructas, organized.

75 14 obsessam, invested; oppugnatam, attacked (by the active operations of siege): the English verb besiege includes both ideas. This was B.C. 74.

75 18 (SECT. 21.) ad Italiam: a fleet which Mithridates had despatched for Italy with a contingent furnished by Sertorius, had been defeated by Lucullus near the island of Lemnos. — ducibus Sertorianis: abl. abs. — studio, zeal (for one party); odio, hate (for the other).

75 20 proeliis: § 259, a; cf. B. 230, 2; G. 394, R.; H. & B.

75 21 Pontum, i.e. the Euxine Sea.

75 22 ex omni aditu, at every approach.

75 23 Sinopen, Amisum: towns on the north coast of Asia Minor.

75 ²⁵ aditu, approach; adventu, arrival. The fact is, that both Sinope and Amisus had made a very stubborn resistance, which the orator chooses to ignore. A certain vagueness in Cicero's whole account in this and the following chapter is doubtless due to a wish to spare Lucullus.

75 ²⁶ alios reges: his son Machāres, king of Bosphorus, and his son-in-law Tigrānes, king of Armenia.

75 ²⁸ salvis, i.e. without harming the allies; integris, i.e. without impairing the revenues.

75 ²⁹ ita, of such a kind.

75 ³⁰ a nullo, etc.: thus Cicero's praise of Lucullus has a definite place in the argument. It is important for him to show that this law can be advocated by one who fully appreciates the merits of Lucullus.

FIG. 21

COIN OF AMISUS.

76 ¹ (SECT. 22.) requiretur, the question will be asked (emph.).

76 ⁴ primum: the corresponding particles ("secondly," etc.) are omitted; the next point begins at sect. 23.

76 ⁵ Ponto: the old kingdom of Colchis, the scene of Jason's adventures in winning the Golden Fleece (see Gayley, Classic Myths, §§ 145 ff.), was on the eastern shore of the Euxine and formed a part of Mithridates' kingdom of Pontus.—Medea: see Fig. 22 (from a wall-painting).—quam praedicant, who, as they tell. (The usual sign of indir. disc. in English, that, cannot be used with a relative.)

76 ⁷ persequeretur, was likely to follow. This is a subord. clause in indir. disc.; but, even if the story were being told in dir. disc. (without praedicant), we should still have persequeretur on the principle of informal indir. disc., expressing the thought of Medea : § 341, d (); B. 323 ; G. 628 ; H. 528, 1 (649, 1) ; H. & B. ; this is shown by the use of se (not eam) in l. 6. — conlectio dispersa, the scattered gathering : the phrase vividly expresses the idea of his wandering about to pick them up.

76 9 vim auri, etc. : the immense treasures which Mithridates had accumulated in his several fortresses came into the hands of Lucullus : not money simply, but works of art, etc.

76 10 quas et . . . et, equiv. to quas partim . . . partim.

76 14 illum, hos, denote distance and nearness of time. Render in the pass. to keep the emphasis, the one was detained by, etc.

76 15 (SECT. 23.) hunc, i.e. Mithridates.

76 16 confirmavit, reassured.

76 19 erat enim, etc. : explaining the reason why these nations displayed hostility, though the Romans had no designs on them.

76 20 eis nationibus, i.e. those near Armenia.

76 22 gravis atque vehemens, potent and very strongly held.

76 23 fani : "the temple of the Persian Nanæa, or Anaitis, in Elymais, or the modern Luristan [that part of Susiana nearest to the Euphrates], the most celebrated and the richest shrine in the whole region of the Euphrates." Such a rumor would at once fire the population of the whole East.

76 27 urbem : Tigranocerta, the new capital of Tigranes, situated in the southwest part of his kingdom, near the river Tigris. This city was destroyed by Lucullus.

76 29 commovebatur, was affected. After all his successes, Lucullus had made somewhat the same mistake as Napoleon in his Russian expedition, and had found himself in an awkward situation, far from his base of operations, and in the midst of infuriated enemies.

76 30 (SECT. 24.) hic, on this point. — extremum, the climax.

76 31 ut . . . quaereretur, subst. clause of result : § 332, headnote (); B. 297, 3 ; G. 553, 4 ; H. 501, 1, 2 (571, 2) ; H. & B. .

77 6 opes . . . misericordiam : a short expression for "win them over to pity and call out their resources."

77 7 ut . . . videatur, a result-clause following qui . . . regno : the more natural way to express the idea in English would be by a coördinate clause with and therefore.

77 8 (SECT. 25.) victus, when beaten ; incolumis, at the height of his power.

77 11 ut . . . attingeret, in appos. with eo following contentus. We should regularly have quod with the indic. ; cf. § 333, b () ; G. 542 ;

H. 535, iii (614); H. & B. ; but the form of the clause appears to be determined by acciderat, which takes a subst. clause of result; § 332, a, 2 (); B. 297, 2; G. 553, 3; H. 501, i, 1 (571, 1); H. & B. .

77 12 umquam: not aliquando, on account of the neg. idea implied in praeter spem; § 105, h ().

77 13 victorem: as adj.; § 188, d (); G. 288, R.; H. 441, 3 (495, 3); H. & B. .

78 1 poetae: such were Nævius, who wrote a Bellum Punicum, and Ennius, author of Annales, recounting events of Roman history; both lived in the third century B.C.

78 2 calamitatem: i.e. the defeat of Triarius (B.C. 67), who was leading reinforcements to Lucullus. Only a severe wound of Mithridates saved the Roman army from utter destruction. As it was, the rout was so complete that no [regular] messenger, etc.

78 4 sermone, common talk.

78 6 (SECT. 26.) tamen, i.e. though the defeat was so disastrous.

78 7 potuisset: subj. of characteristic; the cont. to fact idea which is also contained in the word would not have required the subj.; § 311, c (); B. 304, 3; G. 597, R.³ a; H. 511, 1, N.³ (583); H. & B. . — vestro iussu, i.e. by the Gabinian Law (see Introd., p. 66). — imperi: the military imperium could be extended after the term of office by the Senate. The holder of a command thus extended (prorogatum) was called proconsul or propraetor. In this case Lucullus had now held command seven years, from B.C. 74.

78 12-14 coniungant, etc.: this sums up the considerations already urged as to the magnitude of the war (from sect. 23).

78 13 integrae, fresh (cf. p. 76, ll. 20, 21).

III. THE CHOICE OF A COMMANDER (§§ 27-50)

The plan of this division is simple but effective. Four things are requisite in a great commander: scientia, virtus, auctoritas, felicitas. Pompey has all these qualities in the highest degree: (1) scientia (sect. 28); (2) virtus of every kind (sects. 29-42); (3) auctoritas (sects. 43-46); (4) felicitas (sects. 47, 48). Hence he should be appointed (sect. 49), especially since, by Divine Providence, he is at this moment in the East (opportunitas) (sect. 50).

78 15 (SECT. 27.) By way of transition, Cicero sums up (in ll. 15-18) the state of the argument. — satis . . . videor, I have said ENOUGH, I think [to show] why, etc. Observe that the Latin prefers the personal construction (I seem to myself) to our impersonal (it seems to me). — esset, is: imperf. by seq. of tenses after fecisse; § 336 B, N.² (); B. 268, 2; G. 518; H. 495, iv (548); H. & B.

78 17 restat ut, etc., it remains for me, as it seems, to speak; § 329, N. (); G. 553, 4; H. 501, i, 1 (571, 1); H. & B.

78 19 utinam . . . haberetis, I wish you had; § 267 (); B. 279, 2; G. 260, 261; H. 483, 1, 2 (558, 1, 2); H. & B. — innocentium: innocens was an almost technical word to express cleanness of hands on the part of an official; we may translate by blameless or incorruptible.

78 22 nunc vero, but now (i.e. as things stand): opposed to the unfulfilled wish, utinam . . . haberetis. — cum: causal. — unus, but one.

78 23 qui non modo, etc.: this remarkable exaggeration, which puts the exploits of Pompey above those of Alexander, Hannibal, Scipio, and other generals of antiquity, probably suited well enough the temper of the assembly. The student should remember the hyperbole of personal praise and blame characteristic of most political oratory, especially in a "campaign."

78 24 virtute, excellence (not valor only).

78 25 cuiusquam, used on account of the neg. idea in the question quaeres, etc. (see note on umquam, p. 77, l. 12, and cf. umquam, below, l. 29).

Sect. 28. The four things requisite in a commander are all possessed by Pompey in the highest degree: (1) scientia (experience and knowledge in the art of war).

79 1 (SECT. 28.) bello . . . hostibus: loc. abl. expressing the circumstances; we may translate by a clause with when.

79 2 ad patris exercitum: Pompey, then seventeen years old, served with his father, Cn. Pompeius Strabo, consul B.C. 89, the last year of the Social War.

79 4 summi imperatoris: his father, who commanded on the side of the Senate against Cinna, B.C. 87.

79 5 imperator: in B.C. 83 the young Pompey raised an army (chiefly from his father's immense estates in Picenum) and joined Sulla, who complimented him as imperator, although he had not yet held even the quaestorship.

79 6 quisquam, used on account of the neg. idea in saepius . . . quam; see note on cuiusquam, p. 78, l. 25. — inimico, a private adversary (e.g. before a court).

79 9 imperiis: all Pompey's commands had been either assumed by him or irregularly conferred upon him until he obtained the consulship in B.C. 70.

79 12 Civile, Africanum, etc.: Pompey's exploits in these various wars are referred to in the same order but in greater detail below (sects. 30-35), where see notes. The last mentioned, that with the pirates (bellum navale), is of course specially dwelt on (sects. 31-35).

Sects. 29-42. (2) The second requisite in a commander: virtus (excellence, of all kinds). The virtutes of Pompey include not only virtus bellandi (sects. 29-35), but incorruptibility (sect. 37), self-restraint (sect. 40), wisdom, eloquence, good faith, and humanity (sect. 42).

Sects. 29-35. Pompey's virtus bellandi: his former successes (sect. 30); his recent success against the pirates (sects. 31-33); the celerity of his movements (sects. 34-35).

79 21 (SECT. 29.) neque enim illae: Cicero does not mention what the other good qualities are till sect. 36. By an oratorical device he begins as if he did not mean to talk about the ordinary virtutes recognized as necessary for a general, but intended to speak of certain others, equally necessary but perhaps less common (incorruptibility, etc.), for which Pompey was eminent. But he goes on at once to emphasize the possession of the commonly recognized soldierly qualities by Pompey, as if he had forgotten his point in his enthusiasm. Then, with sect. 36, he suddenly pulls himself up, as from a digression, and returns to consider the good qualities he had, as he says, "begun to enumerate." By this method, not only is an air of spontaneity given to the praise of Pompey (as if the orator were carried away by his theme; cf. sect. 3), but the special and rare virtues on which he wishes to lay stress are much emphasized by being, as it were, brought in twice, — a second time when the orator seems in danger of forgetting them (sect. 36).

79 26 (SECT. 30.) testis est, etc.: the enumeration corresponds to that in sect. 28, ll. 12-14, above (Civile, Africanum, etc.).

79 26-28 Italia, Sicilia, i.e. in the Civil War. — Italia: Pompey raised an army to help Sulla against Cinna and Carbo, the Marian leaders (B.C.

83). — Sicilia, Africa: after Sulla's final victory in Italy, he intrusted to young Pompey the subjugation of Sicily and Africa, where Carbo, with the remnants of his power, had taken refuge. Fig. 23 shows a coin of Pompey, on which is an allegorical head of Africa.

79 31 Gallia: this refers to certain hostilities in Gaul when Pompey was on his way to Spain to the war against Sertorius (B.C. 77); these are referred to as bellum Transalpinum in sect. 28.

80 1 Hispania: in the war with Sertorius (see, however, note on p. 71, l. 5).

80 2 iterum: Pompey, on his way back from Spain (B.C. 71), fell in with the remnants of the troops of Spartacus and cut them to pieces in Cisalpine Gaul; but the whole passage is a rhetorical exaggeration.

80 7 (SECT. 31.) omnes orae, etc.: referring to the Piratic War. There is no extravagance in this; the suppression of piracy was the most glorious part of Pompey's career.

80 12 servitutis: the slave system of the ancients made captives a lucrative booty in war.

80 13 hieme, i.e. he either had to sail in the winter, exposed to the danger of being lost at sea (mortis), or, etc.

80 14 tam vetus: the piratical forces were made up of the wreck of those numberless armies beaten and broken up in the wars of the past half-century or more. When the lesser states lost their independence, their bravest men would often prefer the outlaw freedom of piracy to personal slavery, or even to political subjugation. In fact, the pirate state in Cilicia made a sort of republic, unrecognized and defiant.

80 15 quis . . . arbitretur: § 268 (); B. 277; G. 265; H. 484, v (559, 4); H. & B. .

81 7 (SECT. 32.) fuit: for position, see § 344, d, 3 ().

81 11 cum . . . transmiserint: like a relative clause of characteristic; translate when, etc.

81 12 Brundisio, i.e. the short passage to Greece.

81 13 legati: the case is not known; probably not an ambassador, as one would expect from the preceding words, but in another sense, — a military aid. The plur. is perhaps used rhetorically for the sing. — qui: the omitted antecedent (eos) is the subj. of captos [esse].

FIG. 25

81 14 mercatoribus: see Fig. 24 for a trading vessel (from an ancient relief).

81 15 duodecim secures, two prætors; lit. twelve axes (i.e. twelve lictors). As provincial governors, the prætors were each attended by six lictors; in the city they had but two. For an ancient representation of lictors, see Fig. 25 (from a coin).

82 2 (SECT. 33.) vitam ac spiritum: ports of entry are the breath of life to a city which, like Rome, must import its daily supplies of food.

82 3 potestatem: acc., because it is implied that they fell into their power.

82 5 prætore: who he was is not known.

82 6 liberos (a rhetorical use of the plural for the singular): this was a daughter of the distinguished orator Marcus Antonius, who had celebrated a triumph for a victory over the pirates, B.C. 102.

82 10 classis ea, a fleet (not that fleet); followed by a subj. of characteristic (præpositus esset). — consul: who he was is not known.

82 15 Oceani ostium, the Strait of Gibraltar.

82 16 audiatis: for tense, see § 287, c (); B. 268, 7; G. 513; H. 495, vi (550); H. & B.

82 18 (SECT. 34.) sunt: plur., agreeing directly with haec, instead of sing. est with the indir. question as subject; cf. § 334, c, R. (); cf. G. 468; cf. H. 529, ii, 2 (649, ii, 4); H. & B.

82 21 tanti belli, etc., the rush of so great a war sped over the sea.

83 13 (SECT. 35.) Cretensibus: Quintus Metellus, the proconsul (the friend of Verres), had reduced Crete nearly to submission, deriving from this his cognomen Creticus. The Cretans, alienated by his harshness, sent to Pompey, that he, rather than Metellus, might receive their surrender, which Pompey was very willing to do. Civil war nearly broke out between the two commanders in consequence. Pompey, however, who had his hands full in Asia, withdrew from the field and left the honors to his rival.

Sects. 36–42. Not only bellandi virtus is requisite in a commander, but other virtutes as well, all of which Pompey possesses: incorruptibility (sect. 37); self-restraint (sect. 40); wisdom, eloquence, good faith, and humanity (sect. 42).

83 20 (SECT. 36.) quid ceterae ? how with the others ? — paulo ante, i.e. in sect. 29 (see note).

83 24 innocentia : see note on innocentium, p. 78, l. 19.

83 27 quae, subj. of sint (neuter, as referring to antecedents of different genders) : translate these.

83 28 summa (emphat.), in the highest degree.

83 31 (SECT. 37.) putare (in its earlier meaning of reckon : see Vocab.), etc., count '(as such). — centuriatus : two centurions commanded each manipulus of 120 men. The centurions were advanced from the ranks by the commander ; hence there were opportunities for favoritism and bribery.

83 32 veneant, subj. of characteristic.

84 1 aerario : the Treasury was in the Temple of Saturn, under the superintendence of the two city quæstors. The actual management of the funds was in the hands of a large body of clerks, scribae, who formed a permanent collegium.

84 3 provinciae : dependent on cupiditatem ; apparently the person referred to tried to purchase the influence of the magistrates in order to be allowed to retain his province longer than the regular time ; but nothing is known of the case.

84 4 in quaestu, on speculation. — facit ut, etc., shows that you recognize.

84 11 (SECT. 38.) recordamini : imper. as protasis ; § 310, b () ; B. 302, 4 ; G. 593, 4 ; H. 487, 3 (560, 3) ; H. & B.

84 12 quid existimetis : in the dir. question it would be the same form, as deliberative subjunc. ; § 268 () ; B. 277 ; G. 259 ; H. 486, ii (557) ; H. & B.

84 14 hibernis : notice the strong antithesis to armis.

84 17 iudicando : a great part of the emperor's business would be deciding cases of extortion by the publicani, who were of the same class (equites) that held the judicial power in Rome. By not being strict (severus) with them, he might purchase immunity for himself, if brought to trial afterwards on a similar charge.

84 18 (SECT. 39.) hic, in such a case (properly, at this point in my discourse).

84 19 manus, vestigium, i.e. not only was there no intentional injury done, but no unintended evils followed in its train.

84 21 iam vero : here simply a particle of transition. Pompey's winter quarters are contrasted with such as are referred to above in hibernis (l. 14).

84 22 sermones, reports, by way of common talk. — ut . . . faciat, to incur expense in entertaining officers and soldiers.

84 24 enim: the connection of thought is, — [and in this he follows old custom] for, etc. — hiemis, from winter (obj. gen.). — avaritiae, for avarice (subj. gen.): cf. § 217, N. (); G. 363, R.²; H. 396, ii and iii (440, i and 2); H. & B.

84 28 (SECT. 40.) celeritatem, speed. — cursum, extent of travel.

84 29 non . . . quaedam . . . aliqui, it was not that some, etc.

84 30 remigum: galleys, worked by oars and independent of the wind, were generally used as war vessels. In the Mediterranean (particularly in the Barbary States) their use was continued till a very late day; and for some purposes they are still employed. Their trained crews of rowers gave them a speed hardly less than that of steam vessels.

85 2 amoenitas: used of objects of sight, beauty of scenery, etc.

85 3 labor, toil, always with the sense of effort and fatigue.

85 5 ceteri, as Verres, for instance (see "The Plunder of Syracuse," pp. 48 ff.).

85 6 visenda: the passion for travel and sight-seeing was as common among the ancients as in modern times (cf. "The Plunder of Syracuse," p. 52, l. 9; p. 57, ll. 5-7).

85 9 (SECT. 41.) fuisse: cf. fuit in p. 81, l. 7 (and note). — hac continentia, i.e. such as his.

85 10 iam . . . videbatur, was now getting to seem.

85 11 nunc: notice the emphatic repetition (anaphora).

85 14 servire quam imperare: a rhetorical exaggeration for preferring the condition of subject allies to nominal independence.

86 1 (SECT. 42.) consilio, etc.: cf. p. 83, ll. 26, 27.

86 2 ipso, of itself.

86 3 hoc . . . loco, i.e. the Rostra.

86 4 fidem vero, etc.: render and as to his good faith, etc., changing the construction so as to keep the emphasis.

86 5 quam, etc.: render when the ENEMY esteemed it, etc. (contrasting hostes with socios).

86 7 pugnantes, in battle. — victi, in defeat.

Sects. 43-46. (3) The third requisite in a commander: auctoritas, (prestige). This Pompey possesses in a high degree. It has already shown its effect in the East.

86 17 ut . . . ament: clause of result, dependent on commoveri.

86 22 iudicia, expressions of opinion (i.e. by conferring offices on him); cf. what Cicero says of himself in sect. 2 (p. 68, ll. 12, 13).

86 23 (SECT. 44.) ullam usquam: see note on sect. 27 (p. 78, l. 25).

86 24 illius diei: that of the passage of the Lex Gabinia, which conferred upon Pompey the command against the pirates.

86 26 commune: as being against pirates, enemies of all mankind.

86 28 aliorum exemplis: it is not necessary to cite examples of other generals; Pompey's own history furnishes instances enough.

86 31 qui quo die, on the day on which he, etc.: the relatives, admissible in Latin, cannot be literally reproduced in English.

87 3 potuisset: § 308, c, N.¹ (); B. 304, 3, a, N.; G. 597, R.³, b; cf. H. 511, I, N.³ (583); *H. & B. : the protasis is implied in in summa ubertate, etc.

87 4 (SECT. 45) proelio: the defeat of Triarius (see sect. 25).

87 6 provincia, i.e. Asia.

87 8 ad eas regiones, i.e. only into the neighborhood, for Pompey's authority did not extend to the seat of war; this force is given by the preposition ad: in would mean into.

87 12 perfecturus sit: § 334, a (); cf. B. 269, 3; G. 514, b; H. 529, ii, 4 (649, ii, 1); H. & B. — perfecerit: subj. of characteristic.

87 15 (SECT. 46.) illa res: in appos. with the clause quod . . . dederunt.

87 18 Cretensium: towns of the same region or race were often united in leagues or confederacies, chiefly for religious purposes. After the Roman conquest, such communia were sometimes left in existence, and even new ones were organized and allowed to exercise some subordinate political function. The existence of a commune Cretensium is known from inscriptions.

87 19 noster imperator: Q. Metellus (see note on p. 83, l. 13).

87 22 ad eundem, i.e. to Pompey.

87 23 eum quem, one who.

87 24 ei quibus, while they, etc., i.e. those who were jealous of Pompey's reputation.

87 25 potissimum, rather than to any one else (i.e. rather than to Q. Metellus Pius, who also had a command in Spain and who was much older than Pompey). Nothing further is known of this embassy.

87 27 hanc auctoritatem: translate, as to this prestige, though it is really the subj. of valituram esse, the whole clause being governed by existimetis.

Sects. 47, 48. (4) The fourth requisite in a commander: felicitas.

87 30 (SECT. 47.) felicitate: in this quality is implied a special favor of the gods, which it would be presumptuous to arrogate to one's self (hence timide), although Sulla had done so by assuming the cognomen Felix (see Rosc. Am., sect. 12, p. 6, l. 7, and note).

88 2-3 Maximo : Quintus Fabius Maximus, "the shield of Rome" ; Marcello : Marcus Claudius Marcellus, "the sword of Rome," both distinguished in the Second Punic War. — Scipioni : either Africanus the elder, or Æmilianus ; from sect. 60 it might appear to be the latter. — Mario : Caius Marius, who vanquished Jugurtha, subdued the Cimbri and Teutones, and afterwards (B.C. 88) engaged in civil war with Sulla.

88 4 saepius, repeatedly : Marius was consul seven times.

88 5 fuit (emphatic), there really has been ; § 344, d, 2 ().

88 9 hac moderatione : a shorthand expression for hoc modo moderato, in which moderato would refer merely to the result clause ut . . . videamur. — non ut (not to be confounded with ut non), etc., i.e. not of such a kind as to say, etc., but such, etc.

88 11 invisā : because presumptuous.

88 13 (SECT. 48.) non sum praedicaturus : this affectation of passing a subject over in silence is called praeteritio.

88 14 ut, how (introducing an indir. quest.).

88 18 qui . . . auderet : rel. clause of result.

88 19 quot et quantas, correl. with tot et tantas above. Translate by the single word as ; § 106, b ().

88 20 proprium ac perpetuum, secured to him forever.

88 21 cum, introducing the general consideration (communis) ; tum the particular consideration (ipsius).

Sects. 49, 50. Pompey should be appointed commander in Asia, — especially since he is on the spot. Cicero recapitulates the argument and applies it : since all that I have proved is so, can you hesitate to appoint the general whom Heaven provides, — especially (and here a new and powerful reason is added, as if it were an afterthought) since he is on the spot already ?

88 26 (SECT. 49.) sit : subj. of characteristic.

88 28 quin . . . conferatis : § 332, g, N.² () ; B. 298, b ; G. 555, 2, R.³ ; H. 505, 1 (596, 1) ; H. & B. .

88 32 (SECT. 50.) erat deligendus : § 308, c () ; B. 304, 3, a ; G. 597, R.³ ; H. 511, 2 (582) ; H. & B. .

89 1 nunc, as things stand.

89 3 adsit, habeat, possit : result clauses in appos. with opportunitas. — eis qui habent, i.e. Lucullus, Glabrio, and Marcius Rex, who were still in command of Roman armies in Asia. For mood of habent, see § 342, a, N. (); G. 629, R.; H. 529, ii, N.¹, 2 (652, 1); H. & B. .

89 4 cur . . . committamus : observe the different mood in the preceding question quid expectamus?

IV. CONFUTATIO (§§ 51–68)

Sects. 51–58. Objection of Hortensius, — that supreme power ought not to be given to one man. Answer : Hortensius made a similar objection to the Gabinian Law; yet that law turned out extremely well : acting under its provisions Pompey cleared the sea of pirates. Incidental answer to the objection made to sending Gabinius as lieutenant with Pompey (sects. 57, 58).

89 8 (SECT. 51.) at enim (objection), but, you will say.

89 9 adfectus = enjoying. — Catulus : Quintus Lutatius Catulus, at this time the leader of the senatorial party; an estimable man and an experienced statesman, but no soldier. The beneficia amplissima are the successive offices that had been conferred upon him.

89 11 Hortensius : the leading lawyer of the time (see oration against Verres). — ratione, view.

89 14 auctoritates contrarias : of course there were men of influence on the side of the Manilian Law as well as opposed to it; Cicero brings forward the names of several in sect. 68, below.

89 15 ipsa re ac ratione : this appeal from theoretical objections (as Cicero thinks them) to experience (i.e. in the Piratic War) would, of course, be very effective in a public assembly, for theoretical considerations weigh little with such bodies in comparison with facts. Cicero makes it doubly effective by pointing out that his opponents agree with his premises as to the necessity and magnitude of the war and the eminent ability of Pompey as a general, but that they avoid, on these merely technical grounds, what seems to him the obvious conclusion : viz., that Pompey should be appointed.

89 20 (SECT. 52.) tribuenda sint : condition with nothing implied (in dir. disc., sunt).

89 23 pro, in accordance with.

89 24 in senatu : laws did not require any ratification by the Senate. The expression of opinion by Hortensius must therefore have been in an informal discussion, after the promulgation of the law (i.e. its announcement as a proposed bill).

89 25 Gabinium : see Introd., p. 67 of text.

89 27 promulgasset: a bill intended to be brought before either comitia was regularly announced to the Senate and posted in the city two Roman weeks (at least 17 days) before it could be voted on. — ex hoc ipso loco, i.e. in the public discussion of the law, before the vote, in the contio (see sect. 1).

89 31 (SECT. 53.) hanc, i.e. which we have now.

90 1 an implies a strong negative; § 211, b (); B. 162, 4, a; G. 457, 1; H. 353, N.⁴ (380, 3); H. & B. 1 .

90 2 legati, etc.: observe that Cicero seizes the opportunity to recall briefly to the minds of his hearers certain important facts which he has already dwelt on in greater detail (in sects 31-33).

90 3 ex omnibus, etc.: translate, from communication (commeatu, really abl. of specification) with all the provinces. — neque iam, no longer.

90 8 (SECT. 54.) Atheniensium: the Athenian empire of the sea, in the fifth century B.C., resulted from the great victories in the Persian War.

90 9 Karthaginiensium: the maritime power of Carthage was at its height in the third century B.C.

90 10 Rhodiorum: the city of Rhodes was the chief naval power of the Mediterranean during the last three centuries before Christ: its power was broken B.C. 42, at its capture by Cassius.

90 17 permanserit: subj. of characteristic.

90 19 (SECT. 55.) Antiochum: Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, defeated at Magnesia, B.C. 190.

90 20 Persen: Perses or Perseus, the last king of Macedonia, defeated at Pydna, B.C. 168. — Karthaginiensis: Carthage was mistress of the sea at the time when her wars with Rome began; but in the First Punic War she was beaten at her own weapons.

90 22 ei repeats nos: we, i.e. that nation.

91 1 Delos: a very small island in the Aegean Sea, sacred as the birthplace of Apollo and Artemis. It had an excellent harbor, and this, added to its peculiar sanctity, gave it high importance. It had at all times a flourishing commerce and in the time of Cicero was the great slave market of the world, 10,000 slaves being sometimes sold there in a single day.

91 3 eidem repeats nos (l. 23, above).

91 5 Appia Via: the principal highway of Italy, running from Rome to Capua, and thence to Brundisium (see map of Italy, p. 1.). It was begun by Appius Claudius Cæcus, in his censorship, B.C. 312. — iam, at length.

91 6 pudebat magistratūs (acc. pl.): no special case is referred to, but it is implied that any magistrate ought to have felt shame, seeing that the beaks of ships, rostra, were naval trophies.

91 7 cum: concessive.

91 12 (SECT. 56.) dolori: we should be likely to use a more general word, like feelings, which would be defined by the context. Such differences between two languages in the expression of thought are constantly found.

91 15 aliquando, at last (cf. Cat. ii., sect. 1, l. 1).

91 20 (SECT. 57.) utrum, etc., is it that, etc.? Cf. the obsolete use of whether to introduce direct questions in English, as in "whether is it better."

91 17 (SECT. 57.) obtrektatum esse: the subject of obtrektatum esse is the wish of the opponents to defeat the proposed measure (the appointment of Gabinius as lieutenant); as this wish, if successful, would be (like the affirmative measure) a determination, it is expressed by a purpose clause, ne legaretur. — adhuc: this opposition began in connection with the Gabinian Law and is still continued in connection with the Manilian.

91 19 expetenti, earnestly requesting. — postulanti, claiming (as a right).

91 20 legatum: the Senate assigned (legare) subordinate officers to a military commander or provincial governor. These legati had much responsibility, often performing independent duties like those of modern officers "detailed" from the regular line. The usual number of legati was two or three; but Pompey received fifteen by the Gabinian Law, to whom ten more were afterward added.

91 21 velit, conjunctivus modestiae; § 311, b (); cf. B. 280, 2, a; G. 257; H. 486, i (556); H. & B. . — impetret: § 320, f (); B. 282, 3; G. 631, 1; H. 503, ii. 2 (591, 7); H. & B. . — cum: concessive.

92 4 periculo, i.e. a political risk such as any politician would incur in carrying an important measure.

92 4 (SECT. 58.) an: § 211, b (); B. 162, 4, a; G. 457, 1; H. 353, N.⁴ (380, 3); H. & B. . — C. Falcidius, etc.: Gabinius had not been allowed to receive an appointment as legatus under the Gabinian Law, perhaps because he was tribune when it was passed. Cicero urges that there is no reason why he should not be appointed under the Manilian Law, since he no longer holds that office.

92 6 honoris causā, see note on Rosc. Am., p. 3, l. 28. — plebi: old genitive.

92 7 in uno Gabinio, in the case of, etc.

92 8 diligentes, particular, i.e. in urging a technical objection. — qui

. . . deberet: if this were not a clause of characteristic, we should have debebat to express the cont. to fact idea; § 311, c (); B. 304, 3; G. 597, R.³, a; H. 511, I, N.³ (583); H. & B. ; cf. oportebat, Cat. i., sect. 2, l. 13.

92 11 relatueros: the consuls were the natural persons to consult the Senate, but Cicero, as prætor, also had this power.

92 13 impediēt: either consul could, as having maior potestas than a prætor, forbid Cicero to bring the matter before the Senate; but, if he persisted, his act would still be valid.

92 14 defendam: § 319, c (); B. 295, 3; G. 549; H. 499, 3, N.² (568, 8); H. & B. .

92 15 intercessionem: the veto of a tribune, which could stop any political action, and which Cicero would be bound to respect.

92 16 quid liceat, i.e. how far they can safely go. — considerabunt, i.e. before they set themselves against the manifest will of the people.

92 18 socius: not as legatus, but simply as partner in his former honor and credit. This association of Gabinius with Pompey is used as an argument for giving him the office of legatus now.

Sects. 59–63. Objection of Catulus, — “precedents should not be violated.” Answer: “In time of war the Roman people have always consulted expediency rather than precedent; in Pompey’s own case there have already been many violations of precedent.”

92 22 (SECT. 59.) ut . . . videatur: § 332 a, 2 (); B. 297, 2; G. 553, 4; H. 501, 2 (571, 2); H. & B. . — autoritate et sententia, i.e. the weight which one must attach to the opinion of so great a man as Catulus (a kind of hendiadys).

92 23 cum quaereret: cf. cum dixistis, just below; § 323 (); G. 579; H. 521, ii. 2 (600, ii, 1); H. & B. .

92 24 si poneretis: fut. protasis; the apod. is the compound sentence si . . . factum esset, in quo spem essetis habituri, which itself consists of a fut. prot. and apod.; § 311, d (). The tenses depend for their sequence on the perf. cepit. — si . . . esset, if anything should happen to him (a common euphemism then as now). — eo: § 244, d (); B. 218, 6; G. 401, N.⁷; H. 415, iii, N.¹ (474, 3); H. & B. .

92 25 essetis habituri: indir. quest.; for use of periphrastic form, see § 334, a (); B. 269, 3; G. 515; H. 529, ii, 4 (649, ii, 1); H. & B. .

92 31 quo minus . . . hoc magis: § 250, R. (); B. 223; G. 403; H. 423 (479); H. & B. .

92 33 (SECT. 60) at enim: see first note on sect. 51. .

93 1 exempla, precedents: instituta, established customs. — non dicam, etc.: an excellent specimen of the rhetorical device known as praeteritio (cf. note on p. 88, l. 13, above).

93 3 paruisse, adcommodasse, i.e. they disregarded precedents in great emergencies. — temporum depends on casus, consiliorum on rationes (chiastic order).

93 5 ab uno imperatore: Scipio Africanus the younger (Æmilianus), who captured Carthage (B.C. 146) and Numantia (B.C. 133). In his time there had been a law that no person should be consul twice in succession.

93 9 ut . . . poneretur: clause of purpose with visum est (here a verb of decreeing).

93 10 C. Mario: Marius was chosen consul five years in succession, to carry on the wars here referred to.

93 12 (SECT. 61.) The argument in this and the following section is a telling one: "In the case of Pompey himself precedent has often been violated with the full assent of Catulus. Why, then, should Catulus be so scrupulous now, when the highest interests of the state are involved?" For the several occurrences referred to, see notes on sects. 28-30, above.

93 15 privatum, i.e. not a magistrate.

93 18 a senatorio gradu: no one could legally enter the Senate until after holding the quaestorship, the minimum age for which was thirty at least, and regularly thirty-six, while Pompey was at the time referred to (B.C. 82) only twenty-three.

93 20 in ea provincia, i.e. Africa.

93 21 fuit: translate, he showed, etc. (in order to render the abls. of quality, which come in in a way foreign to our idiom).

93 23 victorem, victorious (pred. adj.). — exercitum deportavit: this was one of the essential conditions of a triumph.

93 24 equitem, i.e. not a member of the Senate, having never held a magistracy. — triumphare: the honor of a triumph was restricted to commanders who possessed the imperium by virtue of holding a regular magistracy. Until he was elected consul for the year B.C. 70, Pompey had never had the imperium except by special appointment from the Senate; both his triumphs, therefore, B.C. 80 and 71, were contrary to precedent.

93 27 (SECT. 62.) duo consules: Mamercus Lepidus and Decimus Brutus, B.C. 77. Instead of either of these being sent to Spain as proconsul the next year, against Sertorius, Pompey, though a simple eques, was designated for that service.

93 29 pro consule: when it was desired to retain the services of a magistrate after his term of office had expired, his imperium was extended (prorogatum) by the Senate, and was held by him pro consule or pro praetore, that is, as having the power of a consul or praetor while no longer actually a magistrate. It was not strictly legal to appoint a private citizen in such a capacity; but sometimes, as in Pompey's case, this was done. — quidem, by the way.

93 30 non nemo, a man or two.

93 31 Philippus, a prominent member of the aristocracy (consul, B.C. 91), distinguished for his wit; a man of liberal temper, but a vehement partisan.

93 32 pro consulibus, in place of both consuls.

93 33 mittere: for mitto of the dir. disc. Philippus seems to have put his bon mot into the regular form of a sententia, or formal expression of opinion in the Senate, using the simple present tense, with the qualifying meā sententiā; § 276, b (); B. 259, 2; G. 227, N.²; H. 467, iii, 6 (530); H. & B.

94 2 ut . . . fieret: subst. clause of result after the analogy of the subj. with verbs of happening; § 332, f (); G. 553, 4; H. 501, i (571, 1); H. & B. — ex senatus consulto: another irregularity, for the comitia were the law-making body and therefore of course had the sole power of exempting from the laws. — legibus solutus, exempted from the operation of the laws, i.e. those limiting the age of magistrates (leges annales).

94 3 magistratum: the legal age of a consul was not below forty-three, and that of a praetor not below forty. Pompey, however, was elected consul (B.C. 70) at the age of thirty-six, which was the regular age for the quaestorship.

94 4 iterum: Pompey celebrated his second triumph Dec. 31, B.C. 71, and the next day entered upon the consulship.

94 5 in, in the case of.

Sects. 63–68. The judgment of the people should overrule such objections (sect. 63, l. 11–sect. 64, l. 25). Pompey alone can retrieve the Roman reputation in the East (sect. 64, l. 26–sect. 67). Favorable opinions of leading men (sect. 68).

94 8 (SECT. 63.) atque haec, etc., and all these many precedents, so weighty and so new, have been established in the case of this single man (Pompey), and have originated, too, in measures promoted by Q. Catulus and the other, etc. Lit. “all these many examples (i.e. acts establishing precedents (have come upon this same man (Pompey) [proceeding] from the [senatorial] approval of Q. Catulus," etc. The Latin tends to compress two or more assertions into a single clause, where in English it is more natural to use separate clauses.

94 10 amplissimorum : a regular epithet for dignitaries. — auctoritate, i.e. since they were then prominent members of the Senate.

94 13 comprobatam, i.e. the people, in electing Pompey consul, had only followed the example of the Senate in conferring these repeated honors.

94 14 iudicium, formal decision, expressed by passing the Gabinian Law.

94 16 vel, even.

94 18 delegitis : not literally correct. The Gabinian Law merely prescribed that an ex-consul should receive this command : the Senate selected the man. In fact, however, it was a law made for Pompey, and the Senate would not have ventured to appoint anybody else.

94 21 (SECT. 64.) sin : the protasis extends to attulistis, the connective being omitted. — plus . . . vidistis, had a keener insight in affairs of state.

94 23 aliquando : cf. p. 91, l. 15, and note. — isti : this pron., since it is often used of an opponent in a suit, here at once suggests the opposition now existing between Cicero and Catulus.

94 24 auctoritati : § 230 () ; B. 256, 3 ; G. 217 ; II. 385, i, 465, 1 (426, 1, 518, 1) ; H. & B. .

94 26 Asiatico et regio : the two adjectives enhance the impression of the difficulty of the war by emphasizing its distance and the dignity of the enemy.

94 30 versari, conduct himself (see Vocab.).

95 1 si qui sunt, when they are (lit. if there are any). — pudore (abl. of specification), respect for others. — temperantia, self-restraint.

95 9 (SECT. 65.) requiruntur, are in demand, i.e. pretexts of war are sought, with cities that we hardly know of ; inferatur, may be fastened.

95 11 (SECT. 66.) With Cicero's account of the depredations of the provincial governors, cf. Sheridan's celebrated description in his Speech in Summing up the Evidence on the Second Charge against Warren Hastings : "Should a stranger survey the land formerly Sujah Dowlah's, and seek the cause of the calamity — should he ask what monstrous madness had ravaged thus, what widespread war, what desolating foreign foe, what disputed succession, what religious zeal, what fabled monster, had stalked abroad, and, with malice and mortal enmity to man, has withered, with the gripe of death, every growth of nature and humanity, all the means of delight, and each original, simple principle of bare existence, — the answer will be (if any answer dare be given) : ‘No, alas! not one of these things, — no desolating foreign foe, no disputed succession, no religious super-serviceable zeal! This damp of death is the mere effusion of British amity : we sink under the pressure of their support, we writhe under the gripe of their pestiferous alliance!’” — libenter, etc., I should be glad to argue this face to face, etc.; § 310, a (); B. 305, 1; G. 600, 1; H. 507, N.⁷ (575, 9); H. & B.

95 15 hostium simulatione, under a pretence of [the existence] of enemies: notice the chiasitic order.

95 17 animos ac spiritus, pride and insolence.

95 19 conlatis signis, i.e. in actual warfare.

95 20 nisi erit idem, unless he shall also be one.

95 24 idoneus qui mittatur: see note on impetret, p. 91, l. 21.

95 25 (SECT. 67.) pacatam, etc.: in the forcible extension of the Roman Empire, a province was spoken of as pacata when actual resistance had ceased on the part of the conquered. — quae . . . sit, subj. of characteristic; for tense, see § 287, c (); B. 268, 7; G. 513; H. 495, vi (550); H. & B.

95 29 praetores, i.e. proprators: for, after the time of Sulla, the praetors regularly remained at Rome during their term of office.

95 30 publica, i.e. that allowed them for the support of their fleets and armies.

95 33 iacturis, expenses, in securing their election.

95 34 condicionibus, corrupt bargains, with creditors, etc.

96 1 quasi . . . non . . . videamus: § 312 (); B. 307, 2; G. 602; H. 513, ii, and N.¹ (584 and 2); H. & B.

96 3 (SECT. 68.) dubitare quin, hesitate. The usual construction in this sense would be with the infin.; § 332, g, N.² (); B. 298, b; G. 555, R.³; H. 505, i (596, 1); H. & B.

96 7 auctoritatibus, i.e. the opinions of influential men (cf. auctor in the next line).

96 8 est vobis auctor, you have as authority. P. Servilius (Vatia Isauricus) was one of the most reputable men of the time. He held the proconsulship of Cilicia, B.C. 78–75, in which he gained great successes over the pirates. It was probably his intimate knowledge of the region and the kind of warfare, that led him to support this vigorous measure.

96 11 debeat: for tense, see § 287, a (); cf. B. 268, 1. — Curio: see note on Impeachment of Verres, sect. 18, p. 34, l. 29.

96 13 Lentulus: Cn. Cornelius Lentulus Clodianus, cos. B.C. 72; not to be confounded with Lentulus Sura, cos. B.C. 71, the accomplice of Catiline.

96 15 Cassius: for the character of this family, see note on Verr. i., sect. 30, p. 39, l. 3.

V. PERORATIO (§§ 69-71)

Sects. 69-71. Manilius is encouraged to stand firm. Cicero protests that his own advocacy of the law is disinterested and patriotic.

96 21 (SECT. 69.) auctore populo Romano: the Roman people has already shown its opinion of Pompey by passing the Gabinian Law; hence Manilius has the auctoritas of the whole people behind him, as opposed to the auctoritas of a few aristocrats like Hortensius and Catulus (cf. sect. 63).

96 22 neve, and not.

96 25 iterum: alluding to the former unanimity of the people in passing the Gabinian Law.

96 27 de re . . . facultate, the cause itself, or the power of carrying it through. — dubitemus: § 320, a (); B. 283, 2; G. 631, R.²; H. 503, i (591, 1); H. & B. .

96 29 potestate praetoria, official influence as praetor; more official than auctoritate.

97 1 defero, put at your service.

97 2 templo, i.e. the rostra. The term templum was applied to any place consecrated by regular auspices (augurato). As the public assembly was held augurato, the place of holding it was a consecrated one.

97 3 ad rem publicam adeunt, are engaged in public affairs.

97 4 neque quo, nor because; § 321, R. (); B. 286, 1, b; G. 541, R.²; H. 516, ii. 2 (588, ii, 2); H. & B. .

97 7 honoribus: the term honor is regularly applied to honors conferred by the people, i.e. public offices. These he proposes to earn, not by the arts of a politician, but by fidelity in his profession as an advocate. — pericula relates to the simultates in the next section. It was not possible for him to espouse this democratic measure so earnestly, without incurring coolness, at least on the part of the aristocracy. — ut, so far as a MAN, etc. (Cf. our "humanly speaking," "the Lord willing," and the like.)

97 9 ab uno, i.e. he expects no reward in the way of public office from Pompey's influence. — ex hoc loco, i.e. by political activity (cf. sect. 1).

97 12 (SECT. 71.) mihi: § 232, a (); B. 189, 2; G. 354; H. 388, 1 (431); H. & B. .

97 13 tantum . . . abest ut videar, I am so far from seeming: § 332, d (); G. 552, R.¹; H. 502, 3 (570, 2); H. & B. .

97 16 hoc honore, i.e. the praetorship.

97 20 oportere, I am bound: me (l. 16) is subj. of praeferre, and me praeferre depends on oportere.

FIRST ORATION AGAINST CATILINE

ARGUMENT

CHAP. I. Propositio. Catiline's effrontery in appearing in the Senate when his guilt is known. — 2. Weakness of the consuls in allowing him to live. Contrast with former magistrates in the cases of Gracchus, Saturninus, and Servilius. The situation calls for action: reasons for the delay. — 3, 4. The consul fully informed: latest acts of the conspirators. — Hortatio. 5. Catiline is exhorted to go out and join his confederates. — 6, 7. Life in the city should be intolerable to him: he is feared and hated by all good citizens: his native city begs him to begone. — 8. He has offered to go into custody: all good men urgent for his departure: the Senate shows by its silence approval of Cicero's words. — 9, 10. The consul urges him to depart: but he will go out only as a public enemy. — Peroratio. 11, 12. The consul may be charged with remissness: but he has been biding his time. — 13. For halfway measures would have been of no avail: Catiline's death would not have freed the state from his confederates. Let Catiline depart. Appeal to Jupiter to save Rome.

I. PROPOSITIO (CHAPS. I–IV)

Chaps. I, II. Effrontery of Catiline in appearing in the Senate. Weakness of the consuls in allowing him to live contrasted with the vigorous action of former times in less flagrant cases. Reasons for the delay.

PAGE 99. LINE 2. (SECT. 1.) etiam (et iam), still. — eludet, baffle, i.e. his mad conduct makes fools of the Roman people, as it were, by continuing to escape the just punishment that would suppress it. — quem ad finem: almost equivalent to quamdiu, but implying some shock or crisis (finem) which must follow.

99 3 sese iactabit, insolently display itself. — nihil (adv. acc.), not at all.

99 4 Palati: one of the strongest positions in the city, commanding the Forum, and so most likely to be seized by the conspirators. The Palatium, an isolated hill, of a rudely quadrangular shape, was the original seat of the city of Rome, from which the city spread gradually over the other hills. In the last years of the republic, the Palatine became the fashionable place for residences. Here was Cicero's house as well as Catiline's. It was because of its nearness to his house, as well as because of the strength of its position, that Cicero selected this temple for the meeting of the Senate on this occasion. Under the Empire the Palatine became the seat of the imperial residence, and its name, palace, has passed in this sense into most modern languages.

99 5 bonorum: the Senate was surrounded by a crowd of equites and other citizens (see sect. 21, below).

100 1 locus: the Senate was assembled, not, as usual, in the Curia Hostilia, but in the Temple of Jupiter Stator, which occupied a commanding position on the brow of the Palatine Hill and faced the Sacred Way. The ruins of this temple were discovered some years ago (see view in text). — horum (with a gesture), i.e. the Senators present. — ora, features, voltus, expression: the phrase is a sort of hendiadys, almost equivalent to expression of their features; § 385 (); B. 374, 4; G. 698; H. 636, iii, 2 (751, 3, N.¹); H. & B.

100 2 patere: note the emphatic position. — non: observe the abruptness and force given by omitting the interrog. particle -ne. — constrictam . . . teneri, is held fast bound; § 292, c (); cf. B. 337, 6; G. 238; H. 388, I, N. (431, 1); H. & B.

100 4 proxima, superiore: for what was done on the night of Nov. 6, see sect. 4; as to proxima, last night, we meet with nothing but general assertions.

100 7 (SECT. 2.) O tempora, etc., what a time! what a state of things! (mores = customs of the time.)

100 8 immo, nay more: immo here negatives not the fact of the preceding statement (vivit), but only its form as not being strong enough; nay is similarly used in English, as in Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2. 313: "To strike, to spurn me, — nay, to kill me too!"

100 11 videmur, etc. = think we do enough for (i.e. fulfil our duty to the state). — si . . . vitemus: in the dir. form, satis facimus si vitamus.

100 12 ad mortem: the consuls originally possessed full powers of judgment in criminal cases, including punishment by death. These highest powers of the imperium were suspended within the city by laws which gave the right of appeal to the people (note, p. 110, l. 16), but the Senate could revive them in cases of danger by the formula Videant consules ne quid res publica detrimenti capiat, — a proceeding analogous to the proclamation of martial law. This action the Senate had taken Oct. 21, nearly three weeks before.

100 13 oportebat, apod. of an implied cond.: § 311, c (): B. 304, 3, a; G. 254, R.¹; H. 511, 1, N.³ (583); H. & B. ; the imperf. is used with iam pridem, where in English we might expect the pluperf.; § 277, b; B. 260, 4; G. 234; H. 469, 2 (535); H. & B. ; oportebat alone would mean "you ought [now] to be [but are not]"; with iam pridem it means "you ought to have been long ago and still ought to be."

100 14 iam diu: words in brackets are thought to be spurious insertions in the text.

100 14 (SECT. 3.) an vero properly belongs both to interfecit and perferemus; in English we should connect the two clauses by and. On the force of an, see § 211, b (); B. 162, 4, a; G. 457, 1; H. 353, N.⁴ (380, 3); H. & B. . — vir amplissimus, pontifex maximus: observe how these words strengthen the force of the example.

100 15 Ti. Gracchum: Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus, a young man of high rank and great purity of character, attempted to carry through some important reforms, particularly touching the tenure of the public lands, B.C. 133. Requiring more time to make his legislation effective, he attempted illegally to secure his own re-election as tribune, when he was attacked and killed by a mob of Senators headed by P. Scipio Nasica.

100 16 privatus: at the time referred to, Nasica was only a private citizen of consular rank. He afterwards went into exile, and was made Pontifex Maximus in his absence. The word privatus is rhetorically opposed to nos consules.

100 18 illa, that case, plural for singular as referring to the circumstances of the case.

100 19 Ahala: the magister equitum of the famous Cincinnatus; he killed without legal process the eques Maelius, on suspicion that the latter was aiming at royal power (B.C. 439); see Fig. 25. — novis rebus (the classic expression for a violent change of government), revolution: dat. after studentem.

COIN OF BRUTUS AND AHALA.

100 20 fuit (emphat.), there was, etc., implying that it is so no longer; § 344, d, 3 (); cf. fuit Ilium, Æneid, ii. 325.

100 22 habemus (emphat.), i.e. it is not that we lack, etc. — senatus consultum : i.e. the decree conferring dictatorial power on the consuls (see note on sect. 2, l. 12, above), ut videant consules, etc.

100 23 vehementens, severe, as regards Catiline ; grave, carrying weight, and so justifying the consuls in any extreme measures. — non deest, etc., it is not that the state lacks wise counsels, etc., but that the consuls are remiss in executing them.

100 26 (SECT. 4.) decrevit : translate, to preserve the emphasis, there was once a decree, etc. — ut . . . videret, subst. clause of purp., obj. of decrevit : § 331 () ; B. 295, 4 ; G. 546 ; H. 498 (564, i) ; H. & B.

. — Opimius : Lucius Opimius was consul B.C. 121, when Caius Gracchus, the younger brother of Tiberius, was attempting to carry through a series of measures far more revolutionary than those of his brother. The Senate took alarm, and entrusted the consul with absolute power. In the tumult that ensued, some 3000 are said to have lost their lives, including Gracchus and his leading associate, Fulvius.

100 27 ne . . . caperet, obj. of videret.

100 28 interfectus est (emphat.), i.e. in that case death was promptly inflicted.

100 29 patre : Tiberius Gracchus, the elder, one of the most eminent statesmen of his day. — avo : Scipio Africanus, the conqueror of Hannibal.

101 1 Mario (dat. after permissa) : this was in Marius' sixth consulship (B.C. 100). He was secretly in league with the revolutionists, — Saturninus and Servilius Glaucia, corrupt demagogues, unworthy imitators of the noble Gracchi. When it came to the point, however, the courage of Marius failed him : he deserted his accomplices, and joined the Senate in crushing the revolt.

101 3 rei publicae, poss. gen., the punishment being looked on as something belonging to the party avenged, and exacted from the other party as a payment due.

101 4 remorata est (governing Saturninum, etc.), keep Saturninus and Servilius waiting, i.e. did they have to wait one day, etc. ? — vicesimum : strictly speaking, it was now (Nov. 6) the 19th day by Roman reckoning from Oct. 21 ; cf. § 259, c () ; G. 336, R.¹ ; H. & B.

. — patimur ; for tense, see § 276, a () ; B. 259, 4 ; G. 230 ; H. 467, 2 (532, 2) ; H. & B.

101 5 horum, i.e. the Senate.

101 6 huiusce modi, i.e. like those just mentioned ; § 101, footnote () ; B. 87, footnote 2 ; G. 104, I. N.¹ ; H. 186, I (178, 3) ; H. & B. . — tabulis : brazen tablets, on which the laws, etc., were inscribed. The edict is said to be shut up in them (until put in force), like a sword hidden in its scabbard.

101 8 interfectum esse : § 288, d (); B. 270, 2, a; G. 280, 2; H. & B. — convēnit, perf. : § 311, c; B. 304, 3, a; G. 254, R.¹; H. 511, 1, N.³ (583); H. & B.

101 9 ad deponendam, etc. : § 300 (); B. 338, 3; G. 432; H. 542, iii, 544, 1 (628, 623); H. & B.

101 10 cupio (emphat.), I am anxious : a concession, opposed by sed, below. — me esse : § 331, b, N. (); B. 331, iv, a; G. 532, R.²; H. 535, ii (614); H. & B.

101 11 dissolutum, arbitrary.

101 12 ipse : Latin in such cases emphasizes the subject ; English, the object ; § 195, l (); B. 249, 2; G. 311, 2; H. 452, 1 (509, 1); H. & B.

101 12 inertiae : § 220 (); B. 228, 2; G. 378; II. 409, ii (456); H. & B.

101 13 (SECT. 5.) castra sunt, etc. : an enumeration of the circumstances which make a mild policy no longer possible.

101 14 faucibus, narrow pass, leading north from Etruria, through the Apennines. — conlocata : § 291, b (); B. 337, 2; G. 250, R.²; II. 471, 6, N.¹ (538, 4); H. & B.

101 18 iam, at once.

101 19 erit verendum, etc., I shall have to fear, I suppose (ironical), that all good citizens will fail to say (lit. will not say) that I have acted too late rather than that anybody will say that I have acted too cruelly, i.e. I shall have to fear that I shall be accused of cruelty rather than slackness. — ne non . . . dicat : § 331, f (); B. 296, 2, a; G. 550, 2; II. 498, iii, N.² (567, 2); H. & B. — boni (sc. dicant) : here, as usual, the well-intentioned, i.e. those who held the speaker's views.

101 21 ego : opposed to omnes boni (l. 19, above). — factum esse : § 288, d (); B. 270, 2, a; G. 280, R.² — oportuit : § 311, c (); B. 304, 3, a; G. 597, R.³, a; H. 511, 1, N.³ (583); H. & B.

Chaps. III, IV. The consul is fully informed. Latest acts of the conspirators.

101 22 denique, i.e. then, and not before.

101 23 iam, at length.

101 24 fateatur : for mood, see § 319, 2 (); B. 284, 2; G. 631, 1; H. 500, i (589, ii, 591); H. & B.

101 26 (SECT. 6.) ita ut vivis, just as you are [now] living.

101 27 ne . . . possis : purpose (not result).

101 28 etiam, besides the forces on guard.

101 29 speculabuntur : probably referring to the spies in the interest of the government, who were in the very heart of the conspiracy.

102 1 quid, etc., what is there for you to wait for more? — quod . . . exspectes : rel. clause of purpose.

102 4 inlustrantur, opposed to obscurare ; erumpunt, to continere.

102 7 recognoscas, retrieve, with licet, ut omitted : see § 331, f, R. () ; B. 295, 8 ; G. 553, R.¹ ; H. 502, 1 ; (564; ii, 1) ; H. & B.

102 8 (SECT. 7.) dicere : for tense, see § 336 A, N.¹ () ; G. 281, 2, N. ; H. 537, 1 (618, 2) ; H. & B.

102 9 futurus esset : subord. clause in ind. disc.

102 11 num, etc., was I mistaken in, etc. (lit. did the fact escape me).

102 13 idem (nom.) has the force of also.

102 14 optimatum, i.e. of the Senatorial party. — in ante diem : § 259, c () ; B. 371, 6 ; G. p. 491 ; H. 642, 4 (754, 3) ; H. & B. 000, 0.

102 16 sui conservandi . . . causā : § 298 a, c () ; B. 339, 5 ; G. 428, R.¹ and R.² ; H. 542, N.¹ (626, 3) ; H. & B. ; this passage is neatly turned so as to save their self-respect by attributing their flight to that discretion which is the better part of valor.

102 19 cum . . . dicebas : we should except diceres ; the imperf. indic. is probably an archaic survival ; cf. § 277, e, and N. ().

102 20 tamen : opposed to discessu ("though the rest were gone, yet," etc.).

102 21 (SECT. 8.) Praeneste (Palestrina), an important town of Latium, about twenty miles from Rome, in a very commanding situation. Its possession would have given Catiline a valuable military post. Praeneste had been a chief stronghold of the Marian party in the Civil War, and Sulla had punished it by establishing a military colony there (hence coloniam).

102 23 sensistine, did you not find? -ne here = nonne : § 210, d, and N. () ; G. 454, N.⁵ ; H. & B.

102 24 praesidiis, the garrison manning the walls ; custodiis, sentinels at the gates ; vigiliis, watchmen (i.e. night-guard). — agis, etc. : notice the climax.

102 27 noctem illam superiorem, that night, — night before last, i.e. Nov. 6 ; priore (l. 29, below) refers to the same night.

102 29 quam te : § 336, a, I, R. () ; H. 524, 1¹ (643, 1) ; H. & B.

102 30 inter falcarios, i.e. to the street of the scythe-makers. — non agam obscure, i.e. I will speak out and be more definite. — in domum: § 258, b, N.¹ (); G. 337, R.⁸; H. & B.

103 1 eodem, at the same place (lit. to the same place, according to the Latin idiom).

103 4 (SECT. 9.) gentium: § 216, a, 4 (); B. 201, 2; G. 372, N.⁸; H. 397, 4 (443); H. & B.

103 5 quam rem publicam, what sort of state?

103 6 hic, hic, here, right here. — patres [et] conscripti: the formal designation of the Senators; patres were the patrician members of the Senate, conscripti were the plebeians enrolled in that originally patrician body. The conjunction is regularly omitted (as often in such combinations). Observe that the stock English translation conscript fathers is inexact.

103 8 qui: the antecedent is the understood subject of sunt. — atque adeo, and in fact.

103 9 cogitent: § 320, a (); B. 283, 2; G. 631, 2; H. 503, 1 (591, 1); H. & B.

103 11 oportebat: see sect. 2 and note. — voce volnero: the alliteration is intentional and may easily be imitated in English, — wound with a word. — igitur (resumptive), then (i.e. as I said).

103 13 quemque, each (of the conspirators). — placeret, indir. quest.

103 14 relinqueres, educeres, delib. subj. in an indir. quest.: § 334, b (); B. 302; G. 265; H. 484, v (559, 4); H. & B.

103 16 morae, partitive gen. — viverem: subj. in subord. clause in indir. disc.

103 17 equites: these were C. Cornelius and L. Vargunteius.

103 19 (SECT. 10.) omnia . . . comperi: Cicero's contemporaries made sport of him for using this phrase so often in the case of the conspirators.

103 22 salutatum: supine; § 302 (); B. 340, 1; G. 435; H. 546 (633); H. & B. . All prominent citizens were accustomed to hold a kind of morning reception (cf. "the king's levee") to which their friends and dependents came to bid them good morning and to escort them to the Forum. — cum . . . venissent: best translated by when, etc.

103 23 id temporis, at that very time: §§ 216, a, 3, 240 (); B. 201, 2, 185, 2; G. 336, N.², 369; H. 378, 2, 397, 3 (416, 2, 442); H. & B.

103 24 praedixeram: Cicero had thus put on record, as it were, the fact that he was acquainted with the details of the conspiracy.

103 27 desiderant, have been wanting: § 276, a (): B. 259, 4; G. 230; H. 467, 2 (532, 2); H. & B.

103 28 si minus (sc. omnes), if not.

II. HORTATIO (CHAPS. V–X)

Chaps. V–VII. Why does not Catiline leave the city? Life there should be intolerable to him. He is feared and hated by all good citizens. His native city begs him to be gone.

103 30 murmus, i.e. city wall (cf. parietibus, walls of a house, sect. 6). —intersit: § 314 (); B. 310, ii; G. 573; H. 513, i (587); H. & B. 000, o.

103 31 non feram, etc.: the same idea is repeated for emphasis, but, for variety, different words are used.

103 32 (SECT. II.) atque, and particularly. —huic, i.e. in whose temple we are met.

104 1 Statori (sto): the one who causes to stand firm. The temple to Jupiter Stator was vowed by Romulus when his troops were giving way, and built upon the spot where their flight was stayed. The remains of this temple have been recently discovered on the Palatine, near the Arch of Titus.

104 3 in uno homine, by one man (Catiline); lit. in the case of one man.

104 7 proximis: the consular election was usually held in July; but in this year, on account of the disturbed condition of things, it did not take place until Oct. 28. —in Campo: the comitia centuriata, in which the higher magistrates were elected, were held in the Campus Martius, or military parade-ground, north of the city. This is the space covered by the main part of modern Rome.

104 8 competitores: Catiline's successful competitors were D. Silanus and L. Murena.

104 9 copiis, i.e. persons in the employ of his friends, — slaves and hired retainers. — nullo . . . concitato, without exciting (a very common way of expressing this idiom in Latin).

104 11 videbam, I saw all along (observe the force of the imperf.).

104 12 (SECT. 12.) nunc iam, now at length.

104 16 huius imperi, i.e. that which I now possess: namely, that conferred upon the consuls by the special decree of the Senate dent operam, etc. (see note on p. 100, l. 12). Without this decree they possessed impe- rium, it is true, but it was limited (in the city) by special privileges of Roman citizens.

104 20 tu: opposed to comitum.

104 22 sentina rei publicae, political rabble; or, keeping the original figure, we might say, bilge-water of the ship of state.

104 24 (SECT. 13.) faciebas, were on the point of doing: § 277, c (); B. 260, 3; G. 233; H. 469, 1 (534, 2); H. & B. .

104 25 hostem, a public enemy, whom the consul would have the right to expel from the city. — non iubeo: Cicero avoids the appearance of ordering a citizen to go into exile, since that was something which the consul had no right to do.

104 27 iam, longer.

104 29 metuat: cf. note on cogitent, p. 103, l. 9.

104 30 privatarum rerum, in private life, i.e. intercourse with others out of the family (distinguished from domesticarum, above).

105 2 quem . . . inretisses, i.e. after entangling, etc. (subj. of characteristic). — ferrum . . . facem, i.e. arm him for acts of violence, or inflame him to deeds of lust.

105 3 (SECT. 14.) quid vero, and say!

105 4 novis nuptiis, etc.: this crime is mentioned by no other writer, and is perhaps one of the orator's exaggerations.

105 5 alio . . . scelere: Sallust mentions, as a matter of common belief, that Catiline killed his own son, in order to gratify his new wife Aurelia Orestilla, "a woman praised for nothing but beauty."

105 8 ruinas: this charge was undoubtedly correct. The conspiracy was mainly composed of men of ruined fortunes, who hoped to better themselves in the general scramble of a revolution.

105 9 Idibus: the Calends and Ides—the beginning and middle of the month—were the usual times for the payment of debts. Catiline's failure in his consular canvass had probably stirred up his creditors to push him for payment.

105 14 (SECT. 15.) cum: causal, but best translated by when.

105 15 prid. Kalendas Ianuarias, etc.: Dec. 31, B.C. 64. The act here mentioned seems to have been in preparation for a rising that had been planned by Catiline for the next day, Jan. 1, B.C. 63. On this day the consuls Cotta and Torquatus entered upon their office, and it was the intention of Catiline to take advantage of their inauguration to murder them and seize the government. The plot got whispered about, and its execution was put off to Feb. 5, when it failed again through Catiline's precipitancy in giving the word.

105 16 cum telo (a technical expression), weapon in hand.

105 17 manum: a band (of assassins). — interficiendorum causā: § 298, c (); G. 428, R.²; H. & B.

105 18 mentem aliquam, some change of mind.

105 20 aut . . . aut, etc., either obscure or few.

105 21 non multa, etc., i.e. they were too well known to need recapitulation, and too numerous to admit of it. — commissa, which you have perpetrated.

105 23 petitiones, thrusts, the word regularly used for the attack of a gladiator. Cicero uses this and similar terms as an affront to Catiline. — ita coniectas, etc., so aimed that they seemed impossible to be shunned. The Latin has no adj. for "impossible."

105 24 corpore, i.e. dodging with the body (a common colloquialism, — hence ut aiunt).

105 26 (SECT. 16.) tibi (dative of reference), etc., wrested from your hands: § 235, a (); B. 188, 1; G. 350, 1; H. 384, 4, N.² (425, 4, N.); H. & B.

105 28 quae quidem, etc., I know not by what rites it has been consecrated and set apart, that you think, etc. (as if Catiline had solemnly pledged himself to use this dagger on nobody lower than a consul).

105 31 nunc vero, but now (indicating a marked transition). — vita, i.e. that you should desire to prolong it (cf. sect. 15).

106 1 quae nulla, nothing of which: § 216, e (); B. 201, 1, b; G. 370, R.²; H. & B.

106 3 necessariis: this word is used of any close relation, as that of kinsman, client, guest, comrade, member of the same order, etc. (see note on necessitudinem, Verr. i, sect. 11, p. 32, l. 3).

106 5 quid quod, what of this, — that, etc.

106 6 subsellia: undoubtedly wooden benches brought in for the occasion.

106 7 consulares: these voted as a class, and probably sat together. Catiline, as a praetorius, no doubt sat in their neighborhood.

106 10 ferendum [esse] is the pred. of the clause quod . . . reliquerunt.

106 10 (SECT. 17.) servi: emphatic, and hence preceding si.

106 13 iniuriā, unjustly, wrongfully.

106 14 carere aspectu, be deprived of the sight of.

106 20 aliquo concederes, would retire somewhere. — nunc: opposed to the cont. to fact si, etc.

106 22 te nihil . . . cogitare, that you think of nothing (depending on iudicat).—iudicat : for tense, see § 276, a (); B. 259, 4; G. 230; II. 467, 2 (532, 2); H. & B. .

106 23 auctoritatem, etc. : observe the climax in both nouns and verbs.

106 25 (SECT. 18.) quae (i.e. patria) . . . agit, she thus pleads with you.

106 26 annis : § 256, b (); B. 231, 1; G. 393, R.²; H. 379, 1 (417, 1 and 2); H. & B. .

106 28 sociorum, i.e. the allied cities of the province of Africa, which Catiline had governed as proprætor, B.C. 67.

106 29 leges et quaestiones, i.e. in his lawless career both as prætor in Rome and as proprætor in Africa. — neglegendas implies only evasion; evertendas, violence.

106 30 superiora illa, those former crimes of yours.

106 32 me . . . esse, etc. : this and the two following infin. clauses (Catilinam timeri and nullum videri . . . consilium) are subj. of est ferendum; posse depends on videri. — quicquid increpuerit, subjunc. of integral part; § 342 (); B. 324, 1; G. 663, 1; H. 529, ii (652); H. & B. .

107 2 abhorreat (subj. of characteristic), is inconsistent with.

107 3 hunc . . . eripe, rescue me from, etc., lit. snatch it from me; § 229 (); B. 188, 2, d; G. 345, R.¹; II. 386, 2 (429, 2); H. & B. 000, 0.

107 4 ne opprimar : § 306, a (); B. 302, 4; G. 595; II. 508, 4 (580); H. & B. . — aliquando, some time or other (implying impatience).

Chaps. VIII-X. Catiline has offered to give himself into custody. The consul bids him depart : the Senators show by their silence their approval of the order. The consul entreats him to leave the city, but he will go only as a declared enemy.

107 6 (SECT. 19.) etiam si . . . possit : § 313, c (); cf. B. 309; G. 604 and R.²; H. 515, ii (585); H. & B. .

107 7 in custodiam dedisti, i.e. into free custody, on parole. This appears to have been late in October, when Catiline was prosecuted on the Lex Plautia de vi. When a respectable Roman was charged with a crime it was customary for some person to bail him out, as it were, by becoming responsible for his appearance. Being thus responsible, the surety kept the accused in a kind of custody at his house.

107 8 ad M'. Lepidum, etc. : ad = apud. Lepidus was the consul of B.C. 66.

107 9 ad me : this was of course intended by Catiline as a demonstration of his innocence.

107 10 domi meae : 258, e; G. 411, R.⁴; H. & B.

107 12 parietibus, loc. abl.; moenibus, abl. of means. Observe the difference of meaning in these words and the emphasis of the contrast. — qui . . . essem : this would be subj. (sim) in dir. disc. as implying the reason; § 320, e (); B. 283, 3; G. 626, R.; H. 517 (592, 598); H. & B.

107 13 Metellum : Q. Metellus Celer, consul B.C. 60; he afterwards did good service in the campaign against Catiline.

107 14 virum optimum, an excellent man (ironical, of course).

107 16 sagacissimum, keen-scented; fortissimum, energetic and fearless.

107 18 videtur debere, does it seem that he ought to be? Observe that the Latin prefers the personal construction ("does he seem," etc.), which the English idiom with ought does not allow us to imitate; § 330, b, 1 (); B. 332, b; G. 528, R.²; H. 534, 1, N.¹ (611, N.¹); H. & B.

107 19 (SECT. 20.) Two courses were open to Catiline, — to leave the city or to run his chances of being put to death. If he left the city, he could, of course, either join his accomplice Manlius in the insurgent camp at Fæsulæ, or abandon his projects and go into voluntary exile. Apparently some of the Senators had privately urged him to adopt the latter alternative, promising, in that case, that all proceedings should be dropped, and Catiline, though rejecting their advice, had declared that he would not refuse to obey a senatus-consultum decreeing his banishment. Such a decree would, however, have been favorable to Catiline's plans, for, since he had not been formally brought to trial, he would have been able to pose as an injured citizen exiled by an arbitrary aristocratic party. Hence Cicero refuses to put the question to the Senate, though he asserts there could be no doubt about the result. By taking this course Cicero forced Catiline to make his intentions plain by the overt act of leaving the city of his own accord and hastening to the camp of Manlius.

107 23 refer ad senatum : the technical term for the action of the presiding officer (regularly the consul) in bringing a matter before the Senate for action. See general Introduction, p. lvii. — si, etc. : fut. cond. in indir. disc.

107 24 placere (sc. sibi) : the subj. is te . . . exsilium.

107 25 abhorret, is contrary to : because the Senate would have no legal power to pronounce such a judgment.

107 26 faciam ut, etc.: § 332 (); B. 297, 1; G. 553, 1; H. 498, ii (568); H. & B. ; to make the feelings of the Senate clear, Cicero formally commands Catiline to leave the city (egredere, etc.); then pauses to allow the Senators a chance to protest, and then points out that no objections are heard.

107 29 ecquid attendis, are you listening? The adverbial ecquid (at all) can hardly be idiomatically rendered, but gives an emphasis to the question.

107 30 patiuntur, they tolerate this, i.e. they make no objection to this extreme exercise of authority on my part. — quid, etc.: why do you wait for those to express their opinion in words whose wishes you see clearly by their silence? The Latin idiom is quite different: why do you wait for the expressed opinion (auctoritatem) of [those] speaking whose wishes you see [when] silent?

107 32 (SECT. 21.) huic, this . . . here: the demonstrative pronouns are often thus employed in the so-called deictic use, accompanied by a gesture. — Sestio: a member of the aristocratic party whom Cicero afterwards defended in one of his greatest orations.

108 1 M. Marcello: a prominent member of the aristocracy, consul B.C. 51; not to be confounded with the person of the same name mentioned in sect. 19. He took a leading part in the Civil War against Cæsar, and was afterwards defended by Cicero (see p. 213). — iam, by this time. — consuli, consul as I am.

108 2 in templo, i.e. notwithstanding the sacredness of the place. — vim et manus (hendiadys), violent hands.

108 3 cum quiescunt, i.e. by keeping quiet: § 326, a (); G. 582; H. 517, 2; H. & B. .

108 5 videlicet cara, alluding to his demand to have the matter submitted to the Senate.

108 8 voces, cries (of the crowd outside).

108 10 haec (with a gesture, cf. huic, sect. 21, first note), i.e. all that is round us, the city, etc.

108 12 prosequantur, escort. It was the custom for those who were going into voluntary exile to be thus accompanied to the gate by their friends. Cicero sarcastically declares that, if Catiline will depart, the whole Senate will be so glad to be rid of him as to forget his crimes and pay him this honor.

108 13 (SECT. 22.) te ut . . . frangat, i.e. break down your stubbornness (purpose clause after loquor; though it may be an exclam. clause with ut: § 332, c (); G. 558; H. 486, ii, N. (559, 5); H. & B. .

108 15 uti nam . . . duint : § 267, b (); cf. B. 279; G. 201; H. 483, 1 (559, 1); H. & B. ; for form, see § 128, *e*²; B. 127, 2; G. 130, 4; H. 240, 3 (244, 3); H. & B. .

108 16 ire : § 271, a (); B. 295, 4, N.; G. 532, and R.²; H. 498, i, N. (565, 5); H. & B. .

108 18 recenti memoria (abl. of time): translate by a while clause.

108 19 est tanti, it is worth the cost : § 252, a (); cf. B. 203, 3; G. 380, 1, R.; H. 405 (448, 4); H. & B. .

108 20 sit : § 314 (); B. 310, ii; G. 573; H. 513, i (587); H. & B. .

108 21 ut . . . commoveare, etc., subj. of est postulandum : § 331, h (); cf. B. 295; G. 546, 1; H. 499, 3 (564, ii); H. & B. .

108 23 is es . . . ut : § 319, 1, R. (); B. 284, 1; G. 552; H. 500, ii (570); H. & B. .

108 26 (SECT. 23.) inimico, a private enemy, thus attributing to Cicero personal motives of opposition.

108 27 rectā (sc. viā), straightway. — vix feram, etc.: for Catiline's going into voluntary exile would tend to prove that he was innocent and had been persecuted by the consul (see note on p. 107, l. 19).

108 29 sin autem, etc.: Catiline's going to Manlius would prove his guilt and show the wisdom of Cicero's action.

109 1 latrocinio, brigandage, i.e. partisan warfare, as opposed to a regular war (iustum bellum).

109 3 (SECT. 24.) quamquam, and yet : § 313, f (); B. 309, 5; G. 605, R.²; H. 515, iii, N² (586, 4); H. & B. ; cf. the same use of quamquam, p. 108, l. 13, and of tametsi, p. 108, l. 16. — invitem : § 268 (); B. 277; G. 265; H. 486, ii (557); H. & B. . — sciam : characteristic subj.

109 4 Forum Aurelium : a small place on the Via Aurelia, about fifty miles from Rome. The Via Aurelia was the road which led along the sea-coast of Etruria, by which Catiline left the city the following night. — praestolarentur : rel. clause of purpose.

109 6 aquilam : the silver eagle had been adopted by Marius as the standard of the legion, and the eagle in question was said to have been actually used in the army of Marius.

109 8 sacrarium : it was customary in Roman houses to have a little shrine (see Fig. 27) for the worship of the lares and other protecting divinities. Doubtless Catiline was believed to have placed this eagle in such a shrine as an object of superstitious worship.

109 9 ut possis : exclam. clause with ut (see note on p. 108, l. 13).

109 13 (SECT. 25.) rapiebat: § 277 b (); B. 260, 4; H. & B. .
the imperf. is used instead of the pres. because the action is conceived of as ceasing at the moment when Cicero discovered the plot.

FIG. 27

109 14 haec res, i.e. leaving the city as an enemy and taking up arms.

109 16 non modo, to say nothing of; § 209, a, 1 (); B. 347, 2; G. 445; H. 553, 2 (656, 2); H. & B. 000, 0.

109 18 atque connects perditis and derelictis; ab connects fortuna and spe with derelictis.

109 19 conflatam, run together (like molten metal).

109 19 (SECT. 26.) hic, i.e. in this band.

109 21 bacchabere, will revel. To a Roman the word suggested the wild orgies of the frenzied Bacchanals, so that it is much stronger than our revel, which in course of time has become rather vague: cf. Æneid, iv. 301 (and illustrations).

109 23 meditati sunt, have been practised; feruntur, are talked about. — labores: cf. Sallust's Catiline, ch. v: L. Catilina nobili genere natus fuit, magna vi et animi et corporis, sed ingenio malo pravoque. Huic ab adulescentia bella intestina caedes rapinae discordia civilis grata fuere ibique iuventutem suam exercuit. Corpus patiens inediae alioris vigiliae supra quam cuiquam credibile est.

109 25 facinus, deed of violence, contrasted with stuprum, debauchery; just as bonis otiosorum, property of peaceful citizens, is with somno maritorum, the repose of husbands.

109 26 ubi ostentes (purpose clause), opportunity to display (lit. a place, where, etc.).

109 29 (SECT. 27.) reppuli: § 323, 1 (); B. 288, 1, a; G. 580; H. 521, 1 (600); H. & B. . Cicero here takes credit to himself for using his influence as consul to defeat the election of Catiline.

109 30 exsul, consul: observe the play upon words (see Vocab.).

109 32 latrocinium: cf. note on latrocinio, l. 1, above.

III. PERORATIO (CHAPS. XI–XIII)

Chaps. XI–XIII. The consul may be charged with remissness; but he has been biding his time. For halfway measures would have been useless. Appeal to Jupiter to save Rome.

110 2 querimoniam, i.e. for not having suppressed the conspiracy more vigorously. — detester ac deprecere (construed with a me, above), remove by protest and plea.

110 4 patria: the personified patria is dramatically introduced as accusing Cicero of remissness in letting Catiline go unharmed.

110 6 M. Tulli (voc.): the regular way of formal address; the use of the family name (Cicero) is more familiar.

110 9 evocatorem servorum, a summoner of slaves, i.e. to enlist under him against the state. To the Romans (as to all peoples who, having a large slave population, are in constant fear of servile revolts) such an accusation was the most violent reproach conceivable.

110 12 duci, rapi, mactari: § 331, a, N.¹ (); cf. B. 295, 4, N.; G. 546, N.³; H. 535, ii (614); H. & B. .

110 16 (SECT. 28.) rogatae sunt: the magistrate who proposed a law formally asked the people whether they would accept it; hence rogo was the word regularly used for this act, and the proposition itself was called rogatio. The leges in question, Valeria, Porcia, and Sempronia (of Caius Gracchus), were enacted to protect — like our laws securing the habeas corpus and trial by jury — the life and liberty of citizens against the arbitrary power of magistrates, which in this case would apparently be used by Cicero. — at numquam, etc.: as a fact, however, the precedents here referred to had been really violations of the constitution.

110 18 praeclaram . . . gratiam, you show a noble gratitude (cf. habere gratiam and agere gratias).

110 20 nulla commendatione maiorum: though by the Roman constitution the higher offices were open to all citizens, yet it was rare that a man whose ancestors had not held these offices could succeed in attaining them himself. If, like Cicero, he did so, he was called a novus homo, and his descendants belonged to the nobility. — tam mature: Cicero attained the quaestorship, the praetorship, and the consulship (honorum gradūs) at the earliest age possible in each case. This was a mark of public confidence which had never happened to a novus homo before.

110 22 invidiae, i.e. the odium which might attach to the consul's apparently exceeding his constitutional authority. In fact Cicero was later brought to trial and exiled on this very charge.

110 24 (SECT. 29.) num est, pray is (implying strong negation): § 210, c (); B. 162, 2, b; G. 464, R.; H. 351, 1, N.³ (378); H. & B. 000, o.

110 25 inertiae, sc. invidia, the reproach.—an belongs with non existimas.

110 27 conflagraturum, will be consumed (lit. will burn up).

110 29 idem sentiunt, have the same views. — mentibus, thoughts.

110 30 factu, the rare "latter supine": § 303 (); B. 340, 2; G. 436; H. 547 and N.¹ (635 and 4); H. & B. .

110 31 gladiator: the gladiators were trained slaves owned by rich men, and were often employed as bullies in political campaigns. Hence the word came almost to mean ruffian, "bruiser," "thug."

111 1 si . . . honestarunt: notice that the simple condition here expresses cause; § 306, a, N. ().

111 2 superiorum, before them.

The variety of the conditional sentences in sects. 29, 30 is instructive: si iudicarem, . . . non dedissem (cont. to fact), p. 110, l. 30–p. 111, l. 1; si . . . honestarunt, verendum non erat (nothing implied), p. 111, ll. 1–4; si impenderet, fui (mixed), ll. 6, 7; si animadvertissem, dicerent (cont. to fact), ll. 13, 14; si pervenerit, fore (fut., indir. disc.), ll. 15, 16; hoc interfecto, posse (fut., indir. disc., protasis disguised), ll. 18–20; si eiecerit, exstinguetur (fut., more vivid), ll. 20–22.

111 6 maxime, ever so much.

111 7 ut . . . putarem, result clause explaining hoc (not a subst. clause). — partam (from pario), acquired (a very common meaning).

111 8 (SECT. 30.) non nulli, etc.: it should be remembered that there were many well-intentioned citizens who either doubted the existence of a conspiracy or thought Cicero's fears of it greatly exaggerated; and that even among those who admitted the fact there was considerable variety of partisan feeling.

111 9 videant, dissimulent: subj. of charact. (not coörd. with dicerent), expressing the character of the men referred to, while aluerunt, etc. (l. 11), merely gives additional facts about them (hence indic.).

111 14 regie, despotically: the Roman idea of a king and kingly government was associated with Tarquinius Superbus. Here the word also implies the assumption of unlawful power (= tyrannice), as well as its abuse.

111 15 nunc, as it is.—quo; § 201, h (); H. & B. : the antecedent is in castra.

111 17 improbum, dishonest.

111 18 hoc . . . interfecto, disguised fut. protasis; § 310, a (); B. 305, 1; G. 600, 1; H. 507, N.⁷ (575, 9); H. & B. ; the apod. posse is fut. in sense; 307, d (); G. 248, R.; H. & B. .

111 20 eiecerit: for tense, see § 307, c (); G. 244, 2; H. 508, 2 (574, 2); H. & B. .

111 21 eodem, to the same place.

111 22 adulta, full-grown, as opposed to stirps, the root (properly the stock from which new shoots may spring out), and semen, the seed.

111 25 (SECT. 31.) iam diu: the conspiracy was ready to break out B.C. 65 (see note on p. 105, l. 15).

111 26 versamur, have lived.—nescio quo pacto, somehow or other; § 334, e (); B. 253, 6; G. 467, N.; cf. H. 455, 2 (512, 7); H. & B. 000, O.

111 27 veteris (sharply contrasted with nostri), i.e. the disease is of long standing, but its outbreak has occurred just in my consulship.

111 32 visceribus, vitals (properly the great interior organs, as the heart, lungs, etc.).

112 1 aestu febrique, the heat of fever (hendiadys).

112 4 reliquis vivis: abl. absolute.

112 8 (SECT. 32.) circumstare, hang round, for the purpose of intimidation: the praetor urbanus had his tribunal in the Forum.

112 15 patefacta, laid bare; inlustrata, set in full light; oppressa, crushed; vindicata, punished. Observe the climax.

113 1 (SECT. 33.) ominibus, prospects. What Cicero has just said (p. 112, ll. 11–16) makes the omen under which Catiline is to depart,—an omen of good for the state, but of evil for him.

113 4 Iuppiter: thus the oration closes with a prayer to Jupiter Stator, in whose temple the Senate was now assembled.

113 6 Statorem, the Stay. The name was apparently first given to Jupiter as the Stayer (sto, sisto) of flight (see note to sect. 11, p. 104, l. 1), but it is here applied to him as the Stay (supporter) of the Roman state, a meaning which the word may well have from its derivation.

113 8 arcebis, used as a mild imperative; § 269, f (); B. 261, 3; G. 265¹; H. 487, 4 (560, 4, N.); H. & B. .

113 9 latrones: cf. latrocinium in sect. 27 (p. 109, l. 32).

SECOND ORATION AGAINST CATILINE

ARGUMENT

Pars I. CHAP. I. Catiline is gone : the city breathes again ; there is now open war, and no longer a concealed intestine conflict. — 2. He ought to have been put to death ; but all were not convinced : now, his guilt is manifest. — 3. His worthless partisans remain at Rome ; but they are powerless, being closely watched. — 4. Let them follow him. He was the leader of all scoundrels and profligates. — 5. His associates are desperate but contemptible ; let them depart or take the consequences. — Pars II. 6, 7. Catiline is not in exile ; he has joined his army. Men say the consul has driven him into exile : would the charge were true ! — Pars III. 8–10. Character of Catiline's partisans : (i) rich men in debt ; (ii) men eager for power and wealth ; (iii) Sulla's veterans ; (iv) ruined men, hoping for any change ; (v) criminals ; (vi) profligates and debauchees, men of Catiline's own stamp. — 11. Superiority of the patriot forces arrayed against them. — Peroratio. 12. Citizens need not fear ; the consul will protect the state. The conspirators warned. — 13. There shall be no disturbance : the people may trust in the gods.

I. PARS PRIMA (§§ 1–11)

Sects. 1–4. Catiline is gone. He ought to have been put to death : but the time was not ripe, for all were not convinced of his guilt.

PAGE 113. LINE 15. (SECT. I.) eiecimus, expelled (with violence) ; emisimus, let [him] go. The words vel . . . vel (or, if you like) imply that the same act may be called by either name. — ipsum, of his own accord.

113 16 verbis prosecuti may apply as well to kind words of dismissal as to invective. — abiit, simply, is gone ; excessit, has retreated before the storm ; evasit, has escaped by stealth ; erupit, has broken forth with violence, — a climax of expression, but nearly identical in sense.

114 1 moenibus (dat. following comparabitur), against, etc. — atque (adding with emphasis), and so. — hunc quidem, him at any rate.

114 2 sine controversia, without dispute = unquestionably.

114 3 versabitur, will be busy.

114 4 campo, foro, curia, parietes : observe the narrowing climax.

114 5 loco motus est, he lost his vantage-ground : a military expression, hence the simple abl.; § 258, a, N.² (); cf. B. 229, 1; G. 390, 2, N.²; H. 414, ii (463); H. & B.

114 6 nullo impediēte, i.e. his defenders till now could screen him by forms of law.

114 7 iustum (if retained in the text), regular, in due form; cf. note on latrocinium, p. 109, l. 1.

114 9 (SECT. 2.) quod . . . extulit, etc.: § 333, b (); B. 331, v, a; G. 542; H. 540, iv, N. (588, i); H. & B.

114 10 cruentum (pred.), reeking with blood. — vivis nobis (abl. abs), leaving us alive.

114 12 civīs: acc. plur.

114 13 iacet, etc., lies prostrate, etc.

114 15 retorquet oculos begins the figure of a wild beast, which is continued in faucibus. — profecto, no doubt.

114 16 quae quidem, which really.

114 17 quod . . . proiecerit: see note on quod extulit, l. 9, above; for mood, see § 341, d (); B. 323; G. 541; H. 516, ii (588, ii); H. & B.

114 19 (SECT. 3.) For the contents of this and the following section, cf. Cat. i., sects. 27, 28, where the supposed complaint against Cicero for not having put Catiline to death and his reply to it are given at greater length. — qualīs omnis: acc. plur. — oportebat: § 311, c (); B. 304, 3, a; G. 254 R.²; H. 511, I, N.³ (583); H. & B.

114 20 qui . . . accuset, as to accuse: § 320 (); B. 283, 1; G. 631, 2; H. 503, i (591, 1); H. & B.

114 22 ista: for gender, see § 195, d (); cf. B. 250, 3; G. 211, R.⁵; H. 445, 4 (396, 2); H. & B.

114 23 interfectum esse: § 288, d (); B. 270, 2, a; G. 280, R.²; H. & B.; observe the emphatic position.

114 24 oportebat: for tense, see note on Cat. i., p. 100, l. 13.

114 25 huius imperi: see note on Cat. i., p. 104, l. 16. — res publica, the public interest.

114 27 quam multos, etc.: the passages in brackets are probably spurious; it will be observed that they merely repeat the preceding statement in each case.

115 1 (SECT. 4.) cum (causal) viderem, seeing; its obj. is fore ut . . . possem (which is the apod. of si multassem): § 288, f (); B. 270, 3; G. 248; H. 537, 3 (619, 2); H. & B. — ne . . . probata: nearly equivalent to cum ne vos quidem . . . probaretis; implying that if they do not sustain the act, much less will the people at large.

115 2 multassem: for fut. perf. of direct; § 337, 3 (); B. 319, B; G. 657, 5; H. 527, i (646); H. & B. .—fore ut, the result would be that, etc.

115 4 ut . . . possetis, result clause explaining huc.

115 5 videretis: § 342 (); B. 324, 1; G. 663, 1; H. 529, ii (652); H. & B. ; if not dependent on possetis, it would be videbitis.—quem quidem, whom, by the way.

115 6 intellegatis: § 331, i (); B. 295, 6; G. 553, 2; H. 499, 3 (564, ii, 1); H. & B. .

115 7 quod . . . exierit: § 341, d (); B. 323; G. 539; H. 516, ii (588, ii); H. & B. .

115 9 mihi: eth. dat.; § 236 (); B. 188, 2, b; G. 351; H. 389 (432); H. & B. ; as if, "I notice."

115 10 aes alienum, etc., i.e. petty debts run up in cook-shops and the like; not like the heavy mortgages spoken of afterwards.

115 11 reliquit: notice the emphatic position.

115 12 quos viros: for a characterization of Catiline's partisans, see sects. 18–23.

Sects. 5–11. His worthless partisans remain at Rome, but are powerless: let them follow him. He was the ringleader of all scoundrels and profligates. Let his associates depart or take the consequences.

115 14 (SECT. 5.) prae, in comparison with.—Gallicanis, i.e. those permanently stationed in Cisalpine Gaul. The ager Gallicus below was that strip of sea-coast north of Picenum formerly occupied by the Senones, but at this time reckoned a part of Umbria.

115 15 hoc dilectu, refers to a levy recently raised.—Q. Metellus (Celer): see note on Cat. i., sect. 19, p. 107, l. 13.

115 17 senibus, etc., i.e. those classes who naturally look forward to a revolution to mend their fortunes.

115 18 luxuria = high-livers: abstract for concrete, as common in Latin and older English; cf. Shakspeare, All's Well, ii. 1. 91: "Bring in the admiration" (i.e. this wonderful person).

115 19 vadimonia deserere, desert their bondsmen, i.e. leave them in the lurch in their creditors' suits.

115 21 edictum praetoris, in effect like a sheriff's writ. Any official order of a magistrate was an edictum.

115 22 hos, as opposed to those he did take out.

115 24 fulgent purpura, i.e. displaying their rank as Senators, who alone had the right to wear the broad purple stripe (latus clavus) on the tunic. The reference, therefore, is to foppish young nobles. — mallem: § 311, b (); B. 280, 4; G. 258, and N.¹; H. 486, i (556); H. & B. — eduxisset: § 331, f, R. (); B. 295, 8; G. 546, R.²; H. 499, 2 (565, 2); H. & B. — si . . . permanent: a future condition; § 307, a, N. (); G. 228; H. 467, 5 (533, 2); H. & B.

115 25 mementote, i.e. let them remember that they are objects of suspicion and shall be watched accordingly.

115 27 atque hoc, etc., i.e. their effrontery makes them still more a cause for alarm.

115 28 (SECT. 6.) video, i.e. I know perfectly well.

115 29 cui sit, etc.: cf. Cat. i., sect. 9.

115 31 superioris noctis, i.e. three nights ago.

116 3 ne, surely: an affirmative particle sometimes wrongly spelled nae.

116 5 ut . . . videretis: clause of result explaining quod.

116 7 nisi vero: ironical (as usual), introducing a reductio ad absurdum. (The si only doubles that in nisi.)

116 8 non . . . iam, no longer.

116 11 Aureliā viā: see Cat. i., sect. 24.

116 13 (SECT. 7.) rem publicam: § 240, d (); B. 183; G. 343, 1; H. 381 (421); H. & B. — sentinam, refuse (see Cat. i., p. 104, l. 22).

116 14 eiecerit: the conclusion is implied in O fortunatam. — exhausto, drained off (cf. sentina).

116 15 recreata, invigorated.

116 17 totā Italiā: § 258, f, 2 (); B. 228, 1, b; G. 388; H. 425, 2 (485, 1); H. & B.

116 18 subiector, forgery; circumscriptor, swindler.

116 21 perditus, abandoned wretch.

116 22 hosce: § 101, footnote (); B. 87, footnote 2; G. 104, i, N.¹; H. 186, 1 (178, 2); H. & B.

117 3 (SECT. 8.) asciverit: for tense, see § 287, c (); B. 268, 6; G. 513; H. 495, vi (550); H. & B.

117 4 (SECT. 9.) ut . . . possitis: § 317, c (); B. 282, 4; G. 545, R.³; cf. H. 499, 2, N. (568, 4); H. & B. — diversa studia. In another passage (Cael. xiii) Cicero ascribes to Catiline: Cum tristibus severe, cum remissis iucunde, cum senibus graviter, cum iuventute comiter, cum facinorosis audaciter, cum libidinosis luxuriose vivere. — in dissimili ratione, in different directions.

117 5 ludo, the regular training-school. — gladiatorio: see Cat. i., p. 110, l. 31, and note.

117 7 levior, etc.: the Roman actors, though some of them achieved distinction, were generally regarded as a low class of men.

117 8 tamen, i.e. though a companion of such dissolute persons, yet he possessed the qualities of fortitude and endurance so much admired by the Romans.

117 9 exercitatione (abl. of means), etc., trained by the practice of debaucheries and crimes to endure, etc. — frigore . . . perferendis: abl. with adsuefactus; § 301, N. (); G. 431; H. & B. .

117 10 fortis, a strong and able fellow. — istis, those creatures: § 102, c (); B. 246, 4; G. 306, N.; H. 450, i, N. (507, 3); H. & B. .

117 11 cum . . . consumeret (not concessive), while consuming. — subsidia, etc., i.e. means (his uncommon powers of body and mind) which might have been used, etc.

117 13 (SECT. 10.) sui: § 196, c (); B. 244, 4; G. 309, 2; H. 449, 3 (503, 2); H. & B. .

117 17 audaciae, acts of audacity.

117 19 obligaverunt, encumbered. — res, property; fides, credit.

117 21 libido, i.e. luxurious habits and tastes.

117 23 quidem (concessive), no doubt.

117 24 homines, viris: observe the difference in sense.

117 26 mihi: the ethical dat. gives the phrase a familiar and contemptuous turn which may be reproduced in English by forsooth.

117 28 obliti: observe the quantity.

117 29 caedem, etc.: notice the strong contrast between the character of these worn-out debauchees and the sanguinary nature of their threats.

117 31 (SECT. 11.) instare, is close at hand; plane merely emphasizes the idea of the verb.

118 2 propagarit: for tense, see § 307, c, R. (); G. 595, N.²; H. 473 (540); H. & B. .

118 3 pertimescamus, possit: subj. of characteristic.

118 5 unius: Pompey, just returning from his triumphs in the East.

118 10 quacumque ratione, sc. fieri potest.

118 11 resecanda erunt, shall need the knife (lit. must be cut away): the figure is derived from surgery.

118 12 si . . . permanent: § 307, a, N. (); G. 228; H. 467, 5 (533, 2); H. & B. .

118 13 exspectent: hort. subj. in apod.; § 307, d (); B. 305, 2; G. 595; H. 508, 4 (580); H. & B. .

II. PARS SECUNDA (§§ 12-16)

Sects. 12-16. Catiline is not in exile: he has joined his hostile army. Men say the consul has driven him into banishment; would the charge were true!

118 14 (SECT. 12.) etiam, still (after all that has been done).

118 15 quod, obj. of adsequi, if I could effect it (referring to ipsos, etc.), i.e. their expulsion.

118 17 enim, i.e. the idea is absurd, as is implied in the irony following.

118 19 quid, tell me: i.e. "is that possible?" in view of the circumstances, which he proceeds to narrate. — hesterno die qualifies convocavi.

118 21 detuli: technical term for laying a matter before the Senate; cf. referre (ad senatum) in the Vocabulary.

118 28 (SECT. 13.) quaesivi, etc.: see Cat. i., sect. 9.

118 29 necne: § 211, d (); B. 162, 4; G. 459; H. 353, N.³ (380, 1); H. & B.

118 32 ei: dat. of agent; § 232, a (); B. 189, 2; G. 354; H. 388, 1 (431, 2); H. & B.

119 1 teneretur, was caught.

119 2 pararet: for plup. (see note on Cat. i., p. 100, l. 13). — securis, fascis: the use of these signified that Catiline intended to assume the authority and imperium of consul (see Fig. 25, p. 290).

119 3 signa militaria: see Fig. 28 (from coins). — aquilam: see Cat. i., p. 109, l. 6, and note.

119 5 (SECT. 14.) eiciebam: conative imperf.; § 277, c (); B. 260, 3; G. 233; H. 469, 1 (534, 2); H. & B.

119 6 credo: ironical, as very often in this parenthetical use.

119 8 suo nomine, i.e. not by Catiline's order; the whole is, of course, ironical, as is already indicated by credo.

119 10 Massiliam: Marseilles, an ancient Greek city of Gaul, always faithful and friendly to Rome. It was a favorite place of sojourn for Romans who went into voluntary exile.

119 11 condicionem, terms.

119 12 nunc, even now.

FIG. 28

119 14 pertimuerit, take alarm.

119 18 spe conatuque: referring of course to his treasonable hopes and designs.

119 22 (SECT. 15.) est mihi tanti, it is worth my while: § 252, a (); cf. B. 203, 3; G. 380, I, R.; H. 404 (448); H. & B. .

119 25 depellatur: § 314 (); B. 310, ii; G. 573; H. 513, i (587); H. & B. . — sane (concessive), if you like (see Vocab.).

119 28 invidiae, etc.: rather than have his predictions verified in this way, Cicero prefers the unjust odium of having arbitrarily driven out Catiline to exile.

119 31 aliquando, some day. — quod . . . emisierim: § 341, d (); B. 323; G. 541; H. 516, ii (588, ii); H. & B. . — emisierim . . . eiecerim, let him go . . . drove him out.

120 2 si interfectus, etc.: he thus adroitly excuses himself to those who would have preferred harsher measures. Notice the identity in sound in pro-fectus, inter-fectus, and observe how the argument a fortiori is brought out by the exact antithesis.

120 3 (SECT. 16.) quamquam (corrective), and yet.

120 4 dictitant: notice the frequentative.

120 5 nemo, not a man. — misericors: his going to Manlius was his inevitable ruin, and yet, for all their pity, they still wished him to go.

120 8 latrocinantem, in partisan warfare (see note on p. 109. l. 1). — vivere: § 336, c, N.² (); G. 644, R.³, b; cf. H. 535, i, 6 (613, 7); H. & B. .

120 10 vivis nobis, i.e. without assassinating me.

III. PARS TERTIA (§§ 17-25)

Sects. 17-23. Character of Catiline's partisans: (i) rich men in debt (sect. 18); (ii) men eager for power and wealth (sect. 19); (iii) old soldiers of Sulla (sect. 20); (iv) ruined debtors (sect. 21); (v) cutthroats and criminals (sect. 22); (vi) debauchees (sects. 22, 23).

120 17 (SECT. 17.) sanare: cf. note on vivere, l. 8, above. — sibi, for their own good; for reflexive, see § 196, c, N. (); G. 520; H. & B. . — placare, gain over.

120 20 comparentur, are made up. — singulis, to them one by one.

120 21 si quam, sc. adferre.

120 22 (SECT. 18.) est eorum, consists of those (pred. gen.).

120 23 possessiones, landed property.

120 23 dissolvi, sc. a possessionibus: i.e. although they might pay their debts by the sale of their estates, they cannot make up their minds to do so.

120 25 voluntas et causa, their purposes and claims, i.e. their position before the world.

120 26 tu: the use of the singular, as if he were addressing one of these men directly, gives point to his reproach of the whole class.

120 27 sis: § 268 (); B. 277; G. 466; H. 484, v (559, 4); H. & B.

120 30 tuas: emphatic. — tabulas novas, new accounts, i.e. a general scaling down of debts by legislative enactment, such as that, B.C. 86, "which reduced every private claim to the fourth part of its nominal amount, and cancelled three-fourths in favor of the debtors."

121 2 auctionariae: a forced sale of their estates would give them "new accounts" (tabulae) by reducing their debts; auctionariae [tabulae] would be the placards advertising the sale in question.

121 4 quod, obj. of facere, relating to the forced sale. — neque, and not, connects facere and certare.

121 5 certare cum usuris, struggle to meet the interest: § 248, b (); H. 419, 1²; H. & B. — fructibus: abl. of means.

121 6 uteremur, we should find.

121 7 hos-ce: more emphatic than hos.

121 9 vota facturi, likely to offer prayers, i.e. they will confine themselves to sympathizing with Catiline's revolt; no active coöperation with him need be feared from them.

121 11 (SECT. 19.) premuntur: notice the emphasis, — this class is insolvent; the former class is heavily in debt, but has resources.

121 13 quieta re publica: no poor man could hope to gain political prominence at Rome in ordinary times; these men therefore look to anarchy to achieve their political ends.

121 15 scilicet, in fact.

121 16 desperet, have no hope.

121 17 me . . . vigilare, etc., indir. disc. dependent on the idea of saying implied in praeciendum: § 336, N.² (); G. 652, R., 2; H. 523, i, N. (642, 1); H. & B.

121 18 magnos animos: see Vocab. under animus.

121 22 praesentis agrees with deos: will be at hand, and, etc.

121 23 quod si, now if (as often). The quod is merely adverbial acc.: § 240, b (); B. 185, 2; G. 610, R.²; H. 378, 2 (416, 2); H. & B.
; not like quod in l. 4, above. — iam, at once. — sint . . . adepti:

fut. cond. less vivid. — cum summo furore: § 248, N. (); G. 399; H. 419, iii, N.¹ (473, 3, N.); H. & B.

121 26 non vident, don't they see? § 210, b (); B. 162, 2, d; G. 453; H. 351, 3 (378, 1); H. & B.

121 27 adepti sint, for the fut. perf. indic. of the direct disc. — fugitivo, i.e. one of their own slaves; for, when law is overthrown, brute force will control all.

121 28 sit necesse: § 307, d (); G. 595; H. 508, 4 (580); H. & B.

121 31 (SECT. 20.) ex eis coloniis: Sulla rewarded his veterans (120,000 in number) by liberal grants of land, partly in municipia already existing, partly in new colonies which he founded for them.

122 1 universas, as a whole; civium esse, consist of, etc.

122 2 ei sunt coloni, these are colonists of this sort (as opposed to the general character of the colonies, which Cicero does not wish to impugn).

122 5 beati, men of wealth.

122 7 Sulla, etc., Sulla will have to be raised from the dead, for they can have no such hope in Catiline.

122 8 agrestis, farmers, not Sulla's colonists.

122 9 veterum: alluding to the plunder of the disorderly times following Sulla's victory over the Marian party.

122 12 illorum temporum, i.e. the times of proscription.

122 18 (SECT. 21.) vacillant, stagger under. — vadimoniis, etc., the three steps in bankruptcy, — bail, judgment, and sale of property; proscriptio is strictly the public notice that property is for sale.

122 21 infittiores lentos, dilatory debtors (lit. deniers, i.e. persons who avoid payment of their debts by every possible subterfuge).

122 22 stare, keep their feet.

122 23 ita, in such a way. — non modo, etc.: § 149, e (); B. 343, 2, a; G. 482, 5, R.¹; H. 552, 2 (656, 3); H. & B.

122 29 (SECT. 22.) non revoco: § 276, b (); B. 259, 2; G. 233; H. 467, 6 (530); H. & B.

123 1 carcer: this is the Tullianum, a dungeon near the Forum, still existing. It was properly a jail for temporary detention, as imprisonment was not recognized in Rome as a form of punishment (see Figs. 29, 30).

123 2 numero, in order. — genere, rank.

123 5 imberbis: a mark of effeminacy; bene barbatos, full-bearded, doubtless a military affectation, as, until lately, the wearing of a mustache. Figs. 31, 32 illustrate Roman fashions of wearing the beard.

Fig. 31 (obverse) shows a military cut (head of Sextus Pompey); Fig. 32, the rough beard of a philosopher (L. Junius Rusticus); cf. Fig. 26.

123 6 velis, veils, rather than the substantial toga, which was of unbleached wool. The whole description suggests foppishness and effeminacy.

123 11 (SECT. 23.) saltare et cantare: these accomplishments were hardly regarded as respectable by the better classes. — spargere, i.e. in food or drink: poisoning has in all ages been carried to a high art in Italy.

123 13 scitote: notice the second (fut.) impera. (regularly used in this word).

FIG. 32

FIG. 31

123 16 his noctibus: although this was spoken Nov. 9, yet the Roman year was at this time in such a state of confusion that the true date was probably some time in December, just when the winter was setting in.

Sects. 24, 25. These followers of Catiline contrasted with the defenders of the state. The issue of such a contest cannot be doubtful.

123 27 (SECT. 24.) urbes coloniarum, etc.: the colonies and free communities (municipia) included the walled cities (urbes) in their territory. These well-manned walls would be more than a match for Catiline's rude works (tumulis).

124 1 (SECT. 25.) causas, i.e. the cause of the conspirators and that of the state in their moral aspect (cf. in eius modi, etc., l. 12 below).

FIG. 33

124 2 ex eo ipso, from the very comparison.

124 10 bona ratio, good counsel; perdita, desperate.

124 17 (SECT. 26.) custodiis vigiliisque: see Cat. i., sect. 8, and note.

124 19 consultum, etc., provident measures have been taken. — coloni municipesque: a colony differed from a municipium in being founded by Roman (or Latin) citizens, who retained from the first their citizenship, either in whole or in part. By Cicero's time there was no longer any real difference between the two classes of towns; but the colonies always retained a certain precedence in rank.

124 20 hac . . . excursione: see Introd., p. 113 of text.

124 22 gladiatores: see p. 117, l. 5.

124 23 quamquam (corrective), referring to manum certissimam.

124 24 tamen: pointing the contrast between the suppression of this body and Catiline's expectations from them.

124 29 vocari videtis: the members of the Senate had their gathering place (senaculum) adjoining the curia, and were summoned by heralds (præcones) from this into the building. If any were absent, the heralds were sent to their houses. The curia and senaculum were visible from the place of assembly in the Forum, and the heralds could no doubt be seen going their rounds.

IV. PERORATIO (§§ 26-29)

Sects. 26-29. Citizens need not fear: the consul will protect the city. The conspirators warned. There shall be no disturbance. The gods will lend their aid.

125 2 (SECT. 27.) monitos volo: § 292, d, N. (); G. 537; H. & B. .

125 3 solutior: for compar., see § 93, a (); B. 240, 1; G. 297; H. 444, 1 (498); H. & B. .

125 4 quod, etc., as for the rest (i.e. what remains to be done).

125 5 horum and his relate to the citizens by whom he is surrounded, and imply a gesture.

125 8 cuius: referring, like qui, to the subject of sentiet.

125 17 (SECT. 28.) me, etc., abl. abs. — togato, in perfect peace, i.e. without any military demonstration: the toga was the regular dress of the Roman in time of peace. (See Fig. 33, from an antique statue.)

125 22 illud: in appos. with ut . . . possitis: I will secure that, etc.

125 24 neque . . . -que, not . . . and.

125 28 (SECT. 29.) quibus . . . ducibus, under whose guidance.

126 3 quam urbem . . . hanc, this city which: § 200, b, N. (); G. 616; H. 445, 9 (399, 5); H. & B. ; or (repeating the noun) the city which, etc., — THAT city.

THIRD ORATION AGAINST CATILINE

ARGUMENT

CHAP. I. Exordium. The citizens are congratulated on their deliverance. — Narratio. 2, 3. Story of the arrest: the conspirators' plans were watched: arrest of certain leaders at the Mulvian Bridge. — 4. The conspirators before the Senate: testimony of Volturcius and the Gauls. — 5. The letters produced. Confession of Cethegus, Lentulus, and Gabinius. — 6. The Senate decrees that the traitors be kept in custody, and that a general thanksgiving be held. — 7. Now all is safe: Catiline alone was to be feared, and that only while in the city. Character of Catiline. — 8, 9. The divine aid manifest in sundry omens: Jupiter watches over the city. — Peroratio. 10. Exhortation to keep the thanksgiving: this bloodless victory compared with others more costly. — 11. Cicero claims no reward but a grateful remembrance. — 12. But he is less fortunate than victors in foreign war, since the conquered are still citizens. He relies on the devotion of his countrymen, and has no fear for the future. The assembly dismissed.

I. EXORDIUM (§§ 1, 2)

Sects. 1, 2. The citizens congratulated on their deliverance.

PAGE 126. LINE 7. (SECT. 1.) vitam, lives: the plural would rarely be used in Latin.

126 8 bona, estates (landed property); fortunas, goods (personal property).

126 16 (SECT. 2.) nascendi . . . condicio, the lot of birth.

126 17 illum: Romulus, who, after his death, was deified and identified with the Sabine god of war, Quirinus.

127 4 urbi, etc.: dat. with subiectos.

127 6 idem (plur.), I . . . have also, etc.: § 195, e (); B. 248, 1; G. 310; H. 451, 3 (508, 3); H. & B. .

127 7 eorum, i.e. of the swords.

II. NARRATIO (§§ 3-22)

Sects. 3-7. Story of the arrest. The conspirators watched: their attempts to tamper with the Allobroges disclosed to Cicero: the arrest at the Mulvian Bridge: seizure of incriminating letters.

127 8 (SECT. 3.) inlustrata, patefacta, comperta: the anticlimax is only apparent, for comperta expresses the most difficult as well as the most important of the three acts.

127 9 vobis: opposed to in senatu (l. 8).

127 10 investigata, traced out (observe the figure).

127 11 expectatis, are waiting to hear.

127 12 ut, ever since.

127 16 possemus: § 334, b (); B. 300, 2; G. 467, o; cf. H. 523, ii, i, N. (642, 3); H. & B. . — cum . . . iciebam: notice the tense (at the time I was engaged in driving out, etc., also volebam, below), as compared with erupit (burst forth, once for all). Notice also the difference in mood (at the time, etc.), compared with cum reliquisset in l. 14 (not referring to time at all, but to circumstance: having left behind, etc.): see § 323, 325, a (); B. 288, 1; G. 580, 585; H. 521, i, ii (600, 601); H. & B. .

127 17 invidiam: see Cat. i., p. 128, l. 27, and note.

127 18 illa, sc. invidia. — quod . . . exierit: § 341, d (); B. 323; G. 539; H. 516, ii (588, ii); H. & B. .

127 20 restitissent: in dir. disc. this would be restiterint (fut. perf.).

127 25 (SECT. 4.) quoniam . . . faceret, because (as I thought), etc.; hence the subj. rather than faciebat: § 341, d, R. (); G. 541; H. 516, ii (588, ii); H. & B. .

127 26 oratio, argument: fidem faceret, gain credence.

127 27 rem comprehenderem, get hold of the matter. — ut . . . provideretis: purpose.

127 28 cum . . . videretis: subj. of integral part (otherwise it would be videbitis).

127 29 Allobrogum: the Allobroges were a Gallic nation, between the Rhone and the Alps (in the modern Dauphiné and Savoy); subdued B.C. 121, and united with the province Narbonensis. They were restless under their new masters (see sect. 22), and inclined to take up with Catiline's movement. Their ambassadors had come to complain of certain exactions of their provincial governor. — belli, i.e. when out of the range of the Roman jurisdiction; tumultus, rebellion, i.e. when nearer home.

127 30 Lentulo, see Introd., p. 126: he had been consul B.C. 71, but had been expelled from the Senate the next year, with sixty-three others, on account of his character, and he now held the prætorship with the view of beginning the career of office over again.

128 5 manifesto deprehenderetur, taken in the act: the words apply strictly to the criminals themselves.

128 7 (SECT. 5.) praetores: although the regular duties of the prætors were judicial, yet they possessed the imperium, and in virtue of this could command troops in the absence of the consuls, or under their authority.

128 9 qui . . . sentirent (subj. of characteristic), as men who, etc.

128 11 pontem Mulvium: the bridge over the Tiber, about two miles above the city, by which the principal roads (the Flaminian and Cassian) led into north Italy.

128 13 inter eos, i.e. between the two divisions.

128 15 praefectura: the title given to the politically lowest class of Italian towns, which had lost their independence; cf. Vocab. under colonia and municipium. — Reatina: Reate was a very ancient town of the Sabines, about forty miles northeast of Rome. Cicero was the patronus of Reate; that is, acted as its attorney and legal counsel: which accounts for his having this body-guard of young men from that place. Besides, these simple mountaineers still retained something of the old Italian virtues, and therefore were well fitted for this service.

129 1 praesidio : dat. of service.

129 2 (SECT. 6.) tertia . . . exacta, about 3 A.M. : the night, from sunset to sunrise, was divided by the Romans into four vigiliae of equal length.

129 3 magno comitatu : abl. of accomp.; § 248, a, N. (); cf. B. 222, 1; G. 392, R.¹; H. 419, 1¹ (474, 2); H. & B. .

129 5 res : the occasion of the attack.

129 6 ignorabatur, etc. Though the Allobroges had played the conspirators false, and knew that the consul had his plans ready, they did not know what these plans were, and therefore were as much taken by surprise as Volturcius himself. Even the troops would appear not to have known what special enterprise they were engaged in.

129 11 machinatorem : Gabinius had been the go-between in this case; he and Statilius were to burn the city (Sall. Cat. 43, 44).

129 14 venit : of course he had been summoned like the others.

129 15 praeter, etc., since Lentulus was notoriously lazy.

129 16 (SECT. 7.) viris, dat. after placeret, which has for subject litteras . . . aperiri, etc.

129 18 deferrem, integral part of aperiri; otherwise it would probably be defers: see § 327, a (); cf. B. 291, 1; G. 574; H. 520 (605, 2); H. & B. .

129 20 esse facturum governs the result clause ut . . . deferrem : we may translate, I said I would not fail to lay before the public council a matter touching the public danger before it had been tampered with (integram).

129 22 etenim . . . si, for if, you see.

129 23 reperta . . . essent : in dir. disc. this would be reperta erunt.

Sects. 8-13. The conspirators before the Senate. Evidence of Volturcius and the Allobroges. The letters produced. Confession of the conspirators.

129 27 (SECT. 8.) si quid . . . esset, whatever weapons there might be.

129 30 introduxi, sc. in senatum. — fidem publicam, assurance of safety : he was to be used as state's evidence.

129 31 sciret : subj. of integral part.

130 3 servorum : the recollection of the terrible servile insurrections in Sicily, and especially that of Spartacus in Italy, less than ten years before, would make this shock and terrify Cicero's hearers beyond measure. — ut . . . uteretur : § 331 (); B. 295, 4; G. 546; H. 498, 1 (565); H. & B. ; obj. of the verb of commanding implied in mandata, etc.

130 4 id : in a sort of apposition with ut . . . accederet.

125 5 cum . . . incendissent : subj. because integral part of ut . . . praesto esset ; otherwise it would be incenderimus (fut. perf.).

130 6 erat : § 336, b () ; B. 314, 3 ; G. 628, R. ; H. 524, 2 (643, 4) ; H. & B. .

130 12 (SECT. 9.) ut . . . mitterent : purpose.—equitatum : the Roman cavalry was at this time chiefly composed of Gallic and other auxiliaries.

130 13 sibi (copias) refers to the conspirators ; sibi (confirmasse) to the envoys : § 196, a, 1 and 2 () ; B. 244, i, ii ; H. & B. .

—defuturas [esse] depends on the idea of saying implied in praescriptum.

130 14 fatis : the books bought by Tarquinius Superbus of the Cumæan Sibyl. They were kept in charge of a board, collegium, the quindecimviri sacris faciundis, and consulted in cases of great public emergency (cf. Æneid, vi. 71, and note).—haruspicum : the haruspices were Etruscan soothsayers, who interpreted the will of the gods, chiefly from the entrails of animals sacrificed. They were a private class, of low standing, and are not to be confounded with the augurs, who were a board of Roman noblemen, of high rank, who interpreted the auspices according to the native Roman rules, chiefly by the flight of birds, by lightning, etc.

130 16 Cinnam, etc. : L. Cornelius Cinna was colleague of Marius, and ruled Rome after his death, B.C. 86. L. Cornelius Sulla ruled Rome B.C. 82–79 (see sect. 24).

130 19 virginum : the Vestal Virgins, six in number, maidens of high rank, consecrated to chastity and the service of Vesta. (See Fig. 34.) They were peculiarly sacred, and were highly privileged. Violation of their vow of chastity was incestus, and was regarded as a prodigium of very bad omen. Of the incident referred to here nothing further is known.—Capitoli : the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus (see “Plunder of Syracuse,” sect. 15) was burned during the rule of the Marian faction, B.C. 83.

130 21 (SECT. 10.) Saturnalibus : a very ancient festival in honor of Saturn, the god of seed-sowing, celebrated Dec. 19. During this festival every serious business was suspended ; and it was so complete a holiday that slaves feasted at the same tables with their masters. No better opportunity could be found for the outbreak of an insurrection than this season of unrestrained jollification.

130 24 tabellas, tablets of wood : wax was spread on the inside, and on this the writing was scratched with a stilus. When used for letters, the tablets were tied about with a linen thread, linum, and sealed. See Fig. 35 (from a Pompeian wall-painting) and Fig. 44.

130 27 ipsius manu : the ambassadors had made sure to get all the conspirators committed in writing except Cassius, who alone had the sagacity to keep out of it. — senatui : the Gallic tribes were governed by an aristocracy, having a council or senate as its mouth-piece.

130 28 sese, etc. : in dir. disc., faciam quae vestris legatis confirmavi.

130 29 ut . . . illi, etc. : in the direct form, — vos facite quae sibi ves- tri legati receperunt. Note the change of pronouns as well as of moods and tenses. — sibi recepissent, had taken upon themselves.

130 30 qui . . . respondisset, qui concessive. — tamen, i.e. in spite of the strong evidence against him.

131 5 est vero, etc., i.e. you may well recognize it : it is, etc.

131 6 avi tui : Cornelius Lentulus, cos. B.C. 162. He was princeps senatus, that is, designated by the censors as first man of the Senate : an honorary office, held ordinarily by patricians.

131 8 debuit, ought to have recalled : § 288, a (); B. 270, 2; G. 254, R.¹; H. 537, I (618, 2); H. & B. . (The joining of such opposites as muta and revocare is called oxymoron, or paradox.)

131 9 (SECT. II.) eadem ratione, to the same purport.

131 10 si vellit : § 341, c (); cf. B. 323; G. 663, 2, b (direct, si vis). — feci potestatem, I gave him leave.

131 16 nihilne : equiv. to nonne aliquid.

132 1 esset, is : imperf. by seq. of tenses ; § 287, d (); H. 495, v (549); H. & B. .

132 11 (SECT. 12.) quis sim, etc. : this letter is given with slight variations by Sallust, Cat. 44.

132 12 quem in locum, etc., how far you have gone (alluding to the fact that he was thoroughly compromised).

132 14 infimorum, i.e. slaves; see note, p. 130, l. 3, above.

132 17 (SECT. 13.) illa, the following; § 102, b (); B. 246, 2; G. 307, 3; H. 450, 3 (507); H. & B. .

132 21 furtim, stealthily ("like thieves"); so English stealth from steal.

132 23 senatum consului: deliberative assemblies in ancient times were under the control of the presiding officer, and members could not speak or introduce business except when called upon by him. He laid a subject before them (consulere senatum, referre ad senatum), and asked their opinions individually, in a definite order, usually according to their rank or dignity. In the case of a general question he was said referre (consulere) de summa re publica. The form would be, dic, C. Iuli, sententiam. (See Introd., p. lvii.)

132 25 a principibus, the leading men. — sententiae: the views of the individual Senators (see note on l. 23, above).

132 27 perscriptum: the opinions (sententiae) of the Senators (given as just described) merely determined the substance of the ordinance, which was afterwards written out in regular form by the secretaries in the presence of some of its advocates and under the direction of the presiding officer.

Sects. 14, 15. Action of the Senate: the chief conspirators are given into custody and a thanksgiving is voted.

132 31 (SECT. 14.) L. Flaccus: see note on p. 128, l. 7.

133 1 conlegae: C. Antonius; see Introd. to Cat. i., p. 99.

133 3 rei publicae consiliis, the public counsels, i.e. his own (officially) as consul.

133 4 cum se abdicasset, after abdicating. Lentulus could not properly be called to account during his magistracy; but he might be forced to resign, and could then be proceeded against.

133 6 erant: notice that this and similar clauses in this section, since they are explanations made by Cicero and not parts of the decree, take the indicative.

133 7 L. Cassium, etc.: these last mentioned had not yet been arrested, but Ceparius was caught in his flight and brought back.

133 9 pastores: Apulia was, as now, used chiefly for pasturage. In the summer, when these broad plains were dried up, the flocks were driven to the mountain pastures of Samnium and Lucania. These pastoral regions have always been the home of a lawless and restless population, prone to brigandage.

133 11 colonis, etc.: cf. sect. 20, above (pp. 121, 122).

133 19 (SECT. 15.) supplicatio: a day of prayer, proclaimed by the Senate, either in thanksgiving (gratulatio) as in the present case, or in entreating favor of the gods.

133 20 eorum, i.e. the gods.

133 21 togato, as a civilian: cf. Cat. ii., p. 125, l. 17 and note. See Fig. 33.

133 23 liberassem: in the decree, liberavit.

133 24 hoc interest, there is this difference. — bene gesta, as well as conservata, agrees with re publica (abl. abs.).

133 26 faciendum . . . fuit: observe that this form has not here its usual cont. to fact implication.

133 29 ius, rights. — tamen: he was allowed to resign instead of being put to death without resigning (as in the case below).

133 30 quae . . . fuerat, what had not been a scruple to Marius = a scruple which had not prevented M. from (quo minus, etc.).

133 31 quo minus occideret, to prevent his killing, following religio: § 319, c (); B. cf. 295, 3; G. 549; H. 499, 3, N.² (568, 8); H. & B.

. — C. Glauciam: see note on Cat. i., p. 101, l. 1. — nominatim, i.e. Marius acted merely under the general authority conferred on him by the Senate in the formula, Videant consules, etc. (see note on Cat. i., p. 100, l. 12).

Sects. 16, 17. The conspiracy is now crushed. Character of Catiline.

134 5 (SECT. 16.) pellebam: conative imperf.; cf. p. 127, l. 16, and note.

134 8 pertimescendam: observe the intensive force of per.

134 9 ille erat, etc.: with this character of Catiline, cf. notes on Cat. i., 26 (p. 109, l. 23) and ii., 9 (p. 117, l. 4).

134 10 continebatur: for tense, see § 276, e, N. (); G. 569; H. 519, i (603); H. & B.

134 12 consilium, ability to plan.

134 15 mandarat: for mood and tense, see §§ 322, 309, c (); B. 287, 2; G. 567; H. 472, 2 (539, 2); H. & B.

134 22 (SECT. 17.) depulissem, pushed aside: the image is of averting a crushing weight (molem), just ready to fall.

134 23 non ille, etc., i.e. as Cethegus did. — Saturnalia, i.e. so distant a date. — constituisset: the prot. (cont. to fact) is implied in ille; § 310, a (); B. 305, 2; G. 593, 3; H. 507, N.⁷ (575, 9); H. & B. 000, o.

134 24 rei publicae: dat. after denuntiavisset.

134 25 testes: in appos. with both signum and litterae.

134 26 quae: referring to Cicero's success in securing (lit. capturing) the evidence of guilt.

135 3 hostis (pred. appos.), as an enemy.

Sects. 18–22. Thanks due to the gods. Signs and omens. Jupiter watches over the city.

135 7 (SECT. 18.) cum (correl. with tum vero, l. 9), i.e. we cannot merely guess it (for the reason in the quod clause following), but still more we can almost see it with our own eyes.

135 8 quod . . . potuisse (parenthetical), because, etc. — consili (pred. gen. limiting gubernatio), to belong to human wisdom.

135 11 possemus: for tense, see § 287, a (); B. 268, 7; G. 511, R.³; H. 495, i (546); H. & B.

135 12 faces, etc.: these omens are such as the Romans observed and noted carefully. Livy's history is full of them.

135 16 praetermittendum, inadvertently; relinquendum, intentionally.

135 18 (SECT.

FIG 36

19.) Cotta et Torquato: consuls B.C. 65, the year in which Catiline first intended to carry out his conspiracy.

135 21 aera: the laws were engraved on bronze tables.

135 22 ille . . .

Romulus: there is a bronze statue of the wolf suckling the infants in the Capitoline Museum at Rome, which bears marks either of lightning seaming one of its hind legs, or of some defect in the casting (Fig. 36). This is probably identical with that here mentioned.

135 25 haruspices: see note on p. 130, l. 14.

135 29 flexissent: in dir. disc. flexerint, following appropinquare.

which points to the future ; § 307, d ; G. 595 ; H. 508, 4 (580) ; H. & B. 000, 0.

135 29 (SECT. 20.) illorum, i.e. the haruspices.

135 30 ludi : festivals in which races and theatrical performances were celebrated in honor of the gods ; such festivals were especially appointed to appease the deities in times of danger and distress ; cf. Verres, i., sect. 31.

136 1 idem (plur.), they also.

136 3 contra atque, opposite to what : § 156, a () ; B. 341, 1, c ; G. 643 ; H. 459, 2 (516, 3) ; H. & B. .

136 5 solis . . . conspiceret : the Forum and the Senate house (curia) were east of the south end of the Capitoline Hill, on which stood the Capitolium, or temple of Jupiter Capitolinus (see Plan of Forum).

136 7 inlustrarentur : the word is chosen with reference to the omen of Jupiter looking toward the rising sun.

136 8 conlocandum locaverunt : locare with the gerundive is the regular expression for giving out a contract ; § 294, d () ; B. 337, 7, b, 2 ; G. 430 ; H. 544, N.² (622) ; H. & B. .

136 9 illi, i.e. of year before last.

136 10 consulibus and nobis : abl. abs. expressing the date.

136 13 (SECT. 21.) praeceps, headstrong ; mente captus, insane. — haec omnia, i.e. the universe.

136 15 ita is explained by caedes . . . comparari, below.

136 16 responsum : the regular expression for any prophetic answer as of an oracle or seer. — rei publicae (dat.), against the state.

136 17 et ea, and that too (cf. καὶ ταῦτα).

136 18 ea : referring to caedes, etc., above.

136 20 illud : referring forward to the result clause ut . . . statueretur (ll. 21–23).

136 23 in aedem Concordiae : one of the principal temples at the northern end of the Forum (see Plan), where the Senate had held its session on this day. It was built by the consul L. Opimius, B.C. 121, after his bloody victory over C. Gracchus.

136 26 (SECT. 22.) quo, wherefore ; see § 250, N. () .

136 28 vestris, etc. : observe the contrast between vestris and deorum, which is emphasized by their respective positions.

136 31 non ferendus, intolerable for arrogance. — ille, etc. : anaphora ; see § 386 () ; B. 350, 11, b ; cf. G. 682 ; H. 636, iii, 3 (666, 1) ; H. & B. .

137 2 illa, etc. : omit the words in brackets as being a manifest gloss.

137 6 consilium, etc.: cf. the proverb, quem deus perdere vult, prius dementat.

137 7 ut introduces the result clause ut . . . neglegerent, with which id is in apposition, the whole forming the subject of esse factum. — gens refers here to the Gauls as a whole, not to the Allobroges in particular.

137 10 patriciis: the old patricians, though having no special political privileges, still retained considerable prestige as an hereditary aristocracy. Cf. note on Verres, i., sect. 1 (p. 28, l. 2). Of the conspirators, Catiline, Lentulus, and Cethegus were patricians.

137 12 qui . . . superare potuerint: cf. note on p. 131, l. 8; qui, as subj. of the charact. clause, may be translated by when they.

III. PERORATIO (§§ 23–29)

Sects. 23–25. Citizens exhorted to thanksgiving.

137 14 (SECT. 23.) pulvinaria, shrines: properly cushions, upon which the statues of the gods were laid, when a feast was spread before them. This was called lectisternium, and was usually connected with the supplicatio (see note on p. 133, l. 19). Only certain gods, chiefly Grecian, had pulvinaria, and the rite was established by direction of the Sibylline books (see note, sect. 9).

— celebratote: the future imperative is used on account of its reference to a set time in the future; § 269, d (); G. 268, 2; H. 487, 1¹ (560, 4); H. & B.

The figure in the text (from an ancient altar relief) represents a procession such as was usual on occasions of this kind. Fig. 37 (from an ancient lamp) shows the images at such a feast.

137 20 duce, i.e. in actual command; imperatore, i.e. holding the sovereign power, whether actually commanding that particular operation or not.

137 22 (SECT. 24.) dissensiones: for case, see § 219, b (); G. 376, R.²; H. 407, N.¹ (455); H. & B.

137 23 P. Sulpicium [Rufum], a young man of remarkable eloquence, a leader in the reforming party among the aristocracy. He was tribune B.C. 88, and his quarrel with C. Cæsar was the first act of the Civil War. By his proposition, the command in the Mithridatic War was transferred from Sulla to Marius; and when Sulla refused to obey, and marched upon the city, Sulpicius was one of the first victims.

137 27 conlegam: Lucius Cornelius Cinna, the Marian partisan (see note on p. 130, l. 16). He and Cn. Octavius, a partisan of Sulla, were consuls B.C. 87, after the departure of Sulla for the East, and in their dissensions the Civil War broke out afresh. The victory of Cinna later recalled Marius from exile.

137 29 lumina: among these were Octavius; C. Cæsar (see above), and his brother Lucius; Q. Catulus, father of the opponent of the Manilian Law (see below); M. Antonius, the great orator; and the pontifex maximus, Q. Scævola.

137 30 ultus est: to preserve the emphasis, render, the cruelly, etc., was avenged by Sulla.

137 32 dissensit, there was a quarrel between, etc. — M. Lepidus, father of the triumvir, was consul B.C. 78 (after Sulla's death), with Q. Catulus, son of the one murdered by Cinna. The scheme of Lepidus to receive the Marian party resulted in a short civil war, in which he was defeated by his colleague and killed.

138 2 ipsius: he was the victim of his own violence, and therefore less regretted.

Sects. 26–29. Cicero asks for no reward except the memory of this day. He relies on the devotion of the citizens, and has no fears for the future. The assembly dismissed.

138 3 (SECT. 25.) tamen, i.e. though these disturbances cost a great many lives, yet they were not so revolutionary as this conspiracy, which has been put down without bloodshed.

138 4 commutandam rem publicam, a change of government.

138 12 quale bellum, a war such as,

138 13 quo in bello: § 200, a (); B. 351, 4; G. 615; H. & B.

138 14 omnes, etc., i.e. everybody except the desperate.

138 17 tantum, only so many.

138 18 restitisset (resisto), should survive.

139 8 (SECT. 26.) mutum: such as a statue, for example.

139 12 eandem, diem, etc., the same period of time — eternal as I hope — is prolonged, both for the safety of the city, etc.

139 15 duos civis, i.e. Pompey and himself.

139 20 (SECT. 27.) quae, as: § 201, g ().

139 22 isti (contrasted with mihi), refers to illorum (l. 20).

139 24 mentes, counsels.

139 27 nihil noceri potest, no harm can be done.

139 30 dignitas, etc., i.e. the majesty of the Roman state will be an invisible safeguard for me; cf. "the divinity" that "doth hedge a king" (Hamlet, iv. 5. 123).

139 31 conscientiae, etc., i.e. my enemies, conscious of their guilty sympathy with this conspiracy, will, in their attempts to injure me, inevitably commit some act which will show them to be traitors to the state.

140 2 (SECT. 28.) ultro, i.e. without waiting to be attacked.

140 3 domesticorum hostium: oxymoron; § 386 (); B. 375, 2; G. 694; H. 637, xi, 6 (752, 12); H. & B. ; cf. the same figure in Cat. i., sect. 21 (p. 108, l. 4): cum tacent, clamant.

140 4 convertit: pres. for fut., as often, especially in protasis.

140 6 obtulerint: subjunc. of integral part.

140 8 in honore vestro: honor is used here, as usual, to denote external honors (offices) conferred by the people. Holding the consulship, he had nothing higher to look forward to.

140 13 (SECT. 29.) conservanda re publica: abl. of means.

140 14 in re publica, in public life.

140 15 virtute non casu, etc., i.e. he will show this by such conduct as shall be consistent with this glorious achievement.

141 1 Iovem: the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus is shown in the background of the illustration opposite p. 136; the figure in the text at p. 140 is a restoration of this temple.

FOURTH ORATION AGAINST CATILINE

ARGUMENT

CHAP. I. Exordium. Solicitude of the Senate for Cicero. The question of the traitors' doom must, however, be settled without regard to such considerations. — Propositio. 2, 3. The Senators need not fear for Cicero. Let them take counsel for the welfare of the state. Enormous guilt of the conspirators. Judgment already rendered by the action of the Senate. The sole question is: What shall be the penalty? — 4. Silanus proposes death; Cæsar, perpetual imprisonment. — 5. Cæsar's proposition discussed. — Contentio. 6. Death none too severe a penalty: severity to the conspirators is mercy to the city. Opinion of L. Cæsar. — 7. Severe measures will be supported by the people. — 8. The humblest citizens are stanch.

— 9. The Senators urged to act fearlessly: the consul will not fail them.— Peroratio. 10. Cicero is undismayed: his fame is secure, whatever happens to him. He has undertaken a perpetual war with the bad elements in the state, but the result is certain.— 11. Then let the Senate dare to act rigorously.

As this is the first deliberative oration, delivered in the Senate, contained in this collection, it will be well for the student to consult the account of a senatorial debate given in the Introduction, p. lvii.

In the present case—in which the question was what sentence should be passed upon the captured conspirators—the consul elect, D. Junius Silanus, had advised that they be put to death; C. Julius Cæsar (as prætor elect), on the contrary, that they be merely kept in custody. At the end of the discussion, Cicero, as presiding consul, gave his views as expressed in the present oration. (For the speeches of Cæsar and Cato, see Sallust, Catiline, chs. 51, 52.)

I. EXORDIUM (§§ 1, 2)

Sects. 1, 2. Solicitude of the Senate for Cicero. But the question of the traitors' doom must be settled without regard to such considerations.

PAGE 141. LINE 13. (SECT. 1.) si hæc, etc., i.e. if the consulship has been given me on these terms.

141 14 ut . . . preferrem, subst. clause of purpose in apposition with condicio.

142 2 (SECT. 2.) ego sum ille consul, I am a consul (i.e. that kind of consul).

142 3 aequitas: in the Forum was the tribunal of the prætor who administered justice between citizens.

142 4 campus: see note on Cat. i., sect. 11 (p. 104, l. 7). — auspiciis: the taking of the auspices always preceded the election.

The Roman commonwealth was regarded as depending directly upon the will of the gods. Their will was thought to be expressed in signs sent by them (auspicia). These could be observed only under the supervision of the board of Augurs, a body whose duty it was to know the rules of interpretation as a special science called ius augurium. Most public acts of any kind had to be performed auspicato, especially the holding of all public assemblies in which business was transacted. Thus the Campus was "consecrated by auspices" every time that the comitia centuriata were held.

142 5 auxilium: the Roman Senate, having the management of foreign affairs, was at this time a great court of appeal for subject or friendly nations.

142 7 sedes honoris, i.e. the sella curulis or seat used by the curule magistrates: viz. interrex, dictator, magister equitum, consul, prætor, censor, and curule ædile. It was like a modern camp-stool without back or sides, with crossed legs of ivory, so that it could be folded up and carried with the magistrate wherever he went. See Fig. 38 (from a Roman coin).

FIG. 38

142 8 fuit: we should expect the subj. of characteristic, but the indic. is used (as often) to emphasize the fact.

142 11 ut . . . eriperem (l. 15, below): subst. clause of result, in appos. with exitum (l. 10).

142 14 foedissima, horrible, with the added idea of polluting things sacred.

142 17 fatale: see Cat. iii., sect. 9 (p. 130).

142 18 laeter: § 268 (); B. 277; G. 466; H. 484, v (559, 4); H. & B. : apodosis, see § 306, a (); G. 595; H. 508, 4 (580); H. & B. .

II. PROPOSITIO (§§ 3-10)

Sects. 3-6. The Senators need not fear for Cicero: they should take counsel for the welfare of the state. Enormous guilt of the conspirators, judgment has been already rendered by the action of the Senate. The sole question is: What shall be the punishment?

142 24 (SECT. 3.) pro eo . . . ac mereor, in proportion as I deserve.

142 25 relaturos gratiam, will reward ("return favor": cf. habere, agere).

142 27 immatura: because an ex-consul had reached the highest point of Roman ambition.

142 28 misera: the philosophy of the ancients professed to make them despise death (see Plato, Apologia, and Cicero, Tusc. Quaest. i.—ille ferreus qui, so iron-hearted as (hence movear, subj.) — fratris: his brother Quintus, younger than he, and at this time prætor elect. He served with credit in Cæsar's Gallic campaigns.

142 31 neque . . . non, nor can it be but that, etc.; the two negatives make an affirmative, but with a kind of emphasis which the simple affirmative statement could not give.

142 32 uxor: his wife Terentia. — filia: his daughter Tullia, married to C. Calpurnius Piso. Daughters took the gentile name of the father; see § 80, c (); G. p. 493; H. 649, 4 (354, 9); H. & B. — filius: his son Marcus, now two years old.

143 3 gener: Piso was not yet a member of the Senate, and was probably standing in the lobby. — moveor (emphat., as shown by its position), I am affected.

143 4 uti sint, [to wish] that, etc. (the verb being implied in moveor); pereamus is in the same construction as sint.

143 5 una . . . peste, i.e. by a destruction which is at the same time that of the whole state.

143 9 (SECT. 4.) non Ti. Gracchus, etc.: to preserve the emphasis, render it is not Ti. Gracchus who, etc. For the historical allusions, cf. Cat. i., sects. 3, 4 (p. 100), and notes.

143 10 agrarios: see note on p. 147, l. 29.

143 11 Memmius: C. Memmius, one of the most upright men of his time; he was a candidate for the consulship against Glaucia, was murdered by instigation of Glaucia and Saturninus (B.C. 100).

143 13 tenentur, are in custody; to preserve the emphasis we may change the voice, — we have in our hands. — vestram omnium: § 184, d (); B. 243, 3, a; G. 321, R.²; H. & B. .

143 18 ut . . . nemo: instead of the usual ne quis or ne quisquam; § 319, d, R., cf. § 105, d, N. (); G. 543, 4, cf. 317, 1; H. 497, ii, cf. 457 (568, cf. 513); H. & B. ; because of the following ne . . . quidem.

143 22 (SECT. 5.) iudiciis: their verdict on the conspirators' guilt consisted in the acts recounted in the following clauses.

143 23 gratias egistis: cf. *relatu*ros, p. 142, l. 25.

143 25 abdicare, etc.: see Cat. iii., sect. 14 (p. 133, l. 4), and note.

144 1 (SECT. 6.) sed, i.e. though you have in fact decided. — tamquam integrum, as if an open question (i.e. as if you had not already expressed your judgment).

144 2 iudicetis refers to their judgment as a court with respect to the facts; censeatis, to their view as a public council respecting the punishment.

144 3 illa . . . consulis, etc., I will say in advance what belongs to [me as] the consul: i.e. declare the need of instant action; what action, it is for the Senate to determine ; for construction, see § 214, c (); G. 366 ; H. 401 (439) ; H. & B. .

144 4 nova . . . misceri, that a revolution subversive of the government was on foot : nova (subj. of misceri) means innovations or unconstitutional measures ; misceri refers to the disorder which these would produce.

144 5 concitari mali, that evil designs were set in motion. — videbam : for tense, see § 277, b (); B. 260, 4 ; G. 234 ; H. 469, 2 (535) ; H. & B. .

144 11 opinio : § 247, b (); B. 217, 4 ; G. 398, N.¹ ; H. 417, 1, N.⁵ (471, 7) ; H. & B. .

144 13 provincias, especially Spain, with which Cn. Piso had had relations. It had not yet become fully reconciled since the overthrow of Sertorius, only eight years before. — sustentando, by forbearance ; prolatando, by procrastination.

144 14 ratione : abl. of manner.

144 15 placet, sc. vindicare.

Sects. 7–10. Silanus proposes death ; Cæsar, perpetual imprisonment. Cæsar's proposition discussed.

144 17 (SECT. 7.) haec (with a gesture), all this, i.e. city, citizens, and government.

144 19 amplectitur, adopts.

144 20 pro, in accordance with.

144 21 versatur in, exhibits.

144 27 mortem, etc. : a doctrine of the Epicureans, to which sect Cæsar and many other eminent Romans belonged.

144 31 et ea : cf. note on p. 136, l. 17.

144 32 municipiis dispertiri, sc. eos in custodiam.

145 1 iniquitatem, since it might expose them to danger, and it would be unjust to choose among so many ; difficultatem, since they might decline the service.

145 3 (SECT. 8.) statueritis : subj. of integral part.

145 4 dignitatis : § 214, d (); cf. B. 198, 3 ; G. 366, R.¹ ; H. 401, N.² (439, 3) ; H. & B. . — adiungit, he (Cæsar) adds to his proposal.

145 5 ruperit : § 341, c (); cf. B. 323 ; G. 366 ; H. 401 (439) ; H. & B. .

145 7 sancit, ordains (under penalties).

145 8 per senatum, by an executive decree ; per populum, by a law.

145 11 uno, sc. dolore.

145 12 itaque, etc.: an artful way of making the punishment of death seem less cruel; since death is a relief, these myths, says Cicero, have been invented to give it terror.

145 15 eis remotis: equiv. to a fut. protasis; § 310, a (); G. 593, 2; H. 549, 2 (638, 2); H. & B.

145 17 (SECT. 9.) meā: § 222, a (); B. 211, 1, a; G. 381; H. 408, i, 2 (449, 1); H. & B.

145 19 popularis, not popular, but devoted to the people, democratic: Cæsar was now the recognized leader of this party.

145 20 auctore (abl. abs.), proposer; cognitore, sponsor (a legal term).

145 24 maiorum: none of Cæsar's ancestors were men of any distinction, although some distant relatives were prominent in public affairs in the time of Sulla; see note on p. 137, l. 22. He belonged, however, to one of the oldest patrician families.

145 25 obsidem, i.e. he is pledged at all events to defend the state as against the conspirators.

145 27 interesset: for tense, see § 287, d (); H. & B. — levitatem, want of principle, i.e. of the steady purpose, or stability of character, implied in gravitas.

145 28 saluti, i.e. not voluntati: their interests, not their capricious wishes.

145 29 (SECT. 10.) non neminem: it is said that the person referred to was Q. Metellus Nepos, brother of Celer (see Cat. i., sect. 19), a partisan of Pompey and an enemy of Cicero.

145 31 dedit, decrevit, adfecit, i.e. gave his vote for these acts. With this, of course, his present action is inconsistent.

146 1 qui has for antecedent the subject of iudicarit.

146 3 re, the matter (in general); causa, the issue to be decided. — C. Caesar: the full name gives emphasis, contrasting him with the non nemo (p. 145, l. 29). Cæsar votes for a judgment against the conspirators which seems contrary to the Sempronian Law, but he, a true friend of the people (vere popularis), recognizes that this law applies to Roman citizens only, and that it therefore cannot protect these traitors.

146 4 Semproniam: see note on "Crucifixion," etc., p. 61, l. 10.

146 6 latorem, i.e. C. Gracchus.

146 7 iussu populi: not strictly true, for C. Gracchus was put to death, not by order of the people, but by virtue of the dictatorial authority conferred upon the consuls by the Senate. — rei publicae: dative. — dependisse: punishment with the Romans was regarded as a penalty paid by the offender to the injured party (hence dare, solvere, pendere of the guilty; capere, petere, repetere, postulare, etc., of the person wronged).

146 8 Lentulum: by discussing this conspirator as an example of the would-be popularis, Cicero skilfully throws discredit on the non nemo (p. 145, l. 29) and others like him. — largitorem, etc., i.e. however lavish, — a symptom of courting the popular favor.

146 13 se iactare, i.e. as a pretended friend of liberty, like the non nemo above.

146 15 omnīs cruciatūs: accusative plural.

III. CONTENTIO (§§ 11-19)

Sects. 11-14. Death is none too severe a penalty: rigor in punishing the conspirators is mercy to the city. Opinion of L. Cæsar.

146 17 (SECT. 11.) quam ob rem, etc.: because Cæsar's view has in Cæsar a popular sponsor, while the view of Silanus is in fact the more merciful one. — statueritis, dederitis: § 307, c, and N. (); G. 595, N.²; H. 473, 2 (540, 2); H. & B.

146 18 contio: see Introd. to Manilian Law in notes (p. 272). The action of the consul would have to be justified before the people, who might regard it as a tyrannical measure. In this justification Cicero would have Cæsar to assist him.

146 20 obtinebo eam, make it appear that it (this view), etc.

146 23 ita . . . liceat: an asseveration like our "so help me God." The point lies in the idea of "so and not otherwise" implied in ita.

146 24 ut . . . moveor, as [it is true that] I am influenced, etc.

146 29 animo, in my mind's eye (properly, abl. of means). — patria, native city.

146 32 (SECT. 12.) cum vero: vero introduces (as often) the most striking point. The other conspirators are bad enough, but when, etc.

147 4 Vestalium: see note on p. 130, l. 19.

147 7 si quis: for form, see § 104, a, N. (); G. 106, R.; H. 454, 1 (512, 1); H. & B.

147 9 sumpserit: see note on dependisse, p. 146, l. 7; for tense, see note on statueritis, p. 146, l. 17.

147 18 ut . . . conlocarent: purp. clause in appos. with id (l. 16).

147 22 (SECT. 13.) nisi vero, etc.: reductio ad absurdum, as usual with this phrase; § 315, b, N. (); G. 591, R.⁴; H. & B. — L. Cæsar: L. Cæsar (consul B.C. 64), was a distant relative of the Dictator, son of Lucius Caesar (consul B.C. 90, the year of the Social War), the author of the law giving citizenship to the Italian allies (see note, Arch., sect. 7). The sister of Lucius Caesar (the younger) was married to Lentulus, and his mother, Fulvia, was daughter of M. Fulvius Flaccus, the leading adherent of C. Gracchus. When Gracchus and Flaccus found themselves (B.C. 121) drawn into a collision with the Senate, they sent the young son of Flaccus with a proposition of compromise. The Senate, however, refused to listen to any terms, threw the messenger into prison, — where he was afterwards strangled, — and moved upon the insurgents with all the power of the state. In the contest that followed, both leaders and several thousands of their partisans lost their lives. It was to these events that L. Caesar had appealed, in justifying his vote in condemnation of his brother-in-law Lentulus.

147 26 eius refers to avum. — legatum: of course the informal messenger of insurgents could have no claim to the title ambassador, or to the privileges which attached to the title in ancient as well as modern times.

147 27 quorum limits factum: understand with simile some word describing the present conspiracy (what act of theirs was like this?).

147 29 largitionis . . . versata est: the plans of C. Gracchus embraced not only a lex frumentaria, allowing every citizen to buy a certain amount of corn from the state at less than half its market rate, and a lex agraria, providing for the distribution of public land among the poorer citizens; but also the establishment of several colonies, both in Italy and the provinces, the object of which was at once to provide poor citizens with land, and to relieve the city, by emigration, of a part of its proletariat. Though these grants were perhaps just, yet their proposal was regarded by the nobility as a political bid for popular favor, and hence gave rise to violent party jealousy (partium contentio).

147 31 avus (see note on p. 131, l. 6): he was an active supporter of the Senate on this occasion; ille (l. 32) refers to the same person.

148 4 urbem inflammandam: according to Sallust's Catiline, ch. 43, this work was assigned to Gabinius and Statilius.

148 5 vereamini follows censeo (ironical), as if with ut omitted.

Sects. 14–19. Severe measures will be supported by the people. The humblest citizens are stanch. The Senators are urged to act fearlessly: the consul will not fail them.

148 12 (SECT. 14.) voces, remarks.

148 13 eorum, on the part of those, etc. — vereri . . . ut: § 331. f (); B. 296, 2; G. 550, 2; H. 498, iii, N.¹ (567, 1); H. & B. .

148 16 mea, etc.: observe the antithesis between mea summa cura and maiore populi . . . voluntate.

148 28 (SECT. 15.) ad, for.

148 29 consentiunt, unite.

149 1 ita . . . ut, only to, etc. (lit. with this limitation that): see § 319, b (); G. 552, R.³; H. & B. — summam ordinis consilique, superiority in rank and precedence in counsel.

149 3 huius ordinis (i.e. the Senate) limits dissensione in the sense of cum hoc, etc. For the long contest here alluded to, see Introd., p. lxxv.

149 5 quam si, etc., and if we keep this union, etc.

149 6 confirmo, I assure, in a different sense from confirmatam: Latin style does not (as ours does) object to such repetitions with a variation in meaning.

149 9 tribunos aerarios, deans of the tribes. The Roman people were divided into thirty-five tribes, local and territorial, like wards. These tribes were made the basis of the comitia centuriata, as well as the comitia tributa. They served also as general administrative and financial divisions. From the latter character the name tribuni aerarii was given to their presiding officers.

149 10 scribas: the scribae quaestorii (treasury clerks) formed an important and powerful corporation. As they were a permanent body, while the quaestors (treasurers) were elected annually, they had the real responsibility in the management of the treasury.

149 11 sortis: the quaestors entered upon office on the Nones of December (Dec. 5); all other patrician magistrates on the first of January. The scribae had therefore come together in order to be present while the quaestors drew lots for their provinces.

149 12 (SECT. 16.) ingenuorum, free-born. Freedmen, libertini, were always regarded as inferior in rank, if not in civil and political rights. Even these, however, are shown in the next chapter to be interested in the safety of the republic.

149 18 sua virtute: manumission was very commonly bestowed as the reward of some peculiar merit in the slave.

149 20 hic nati, i.e. citizens, as contrasted with the manumitted slaves (who were for the most part of foreign birth).

149 25 qui modo . . . sit: § 320, d (). — condicione: § 251, N. (); cf. B. 224, 1; G. 400; H. 419, 2⁴ (473, 2, N.¹); H. & B. .

149 28 voluntatis: partitive gen. with quantum, as if tantum voluntatis quantum, etc.

149 30 (SECT. 17.) circum tabernas, i.e. among the artisans. The Roman shops were like little stalls along the street, open in front, with a "long room," or perhaps two, at the back. See Fig. 39 (Pompeian shop, restored); Fig. 40 shows the arrangement of such shops along the streets.

FIG. 39

150 3 cubile ac lectulum: both words mean nearly the same thing, and imply a very humble way of living.

150 4 otiosum, peaceable; so oti (l. 6).

150 8 quorum relates to eorum, three lines above.

150 9 incensis, sc. tabernis. — futurum fuit = fuisset; § 308, d (); G. 597, R.³; H. 511, 2 (582); H. & B. ; the protasis is implied in incensis.

150 11 (SECT. 18.) populi Romani, as contrasted with the Senate: cf. the formula Senatus Populusque Romanus.

151 2 impiae, impious (in its strict sense a want of filial duty).

151 4 arcem et Capitolium : the Capitoline was a saddle-shaped hill, having the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus (Capitolium) on the southwestern point and the old citadel (arx) on the northeastern (see Cat. iii., sect. 20). Since Jupiter Capitolinus was the protecting divinity of Rome, his temple was the most sacred spot in the whole empire.

151 5 aras Penatium : the Penates were gods of the household and the larder (penus), worshipped by every paterfamilias in his own atrium. The state, being developed from the family, had likewise its Penates, which were fabled to have been brought by Æneas from Troy and established at

Lavinium, whence they were transferred to Alba Longa, and afterwards to Rome. Their temple was on the Velia, the low hill connecting the Palatine and Esquiline.—ignem Vestae : the temple of Vesta was on the Sacra Via, toward the Palatine,—a small round building containing the symbolic household fire of the Roman state. See note on the Vestals, p. 130, l. 19.

151 9 focis : the focus, the symbol of household life, was a brazier for burning charcoal. It originally stood at the rear end of the atrium, or great hall, of the house. Later it was moved, for all practical purposes, to the kitchen, but a representative focus remained in the atrium and continued to be the symbol of household life. Fig. 41 shows a great bronze focus from the baths of Pompeii. The domestic focus was, of course, much smaller, but was similar in shape.

151 11 (SECT. 19.) quae facultas : § 201, d (); cf. B. 251, 4, b; G. 616, 2; H. & B. .

151 13 in civili causa, on a political question.

151 14 quantis . . . delerit: this clause will be best turned into English by translating the participles fundatum, etc. as verbs, and deleat as a relative clause, — with how great toil this empire WAS established, WHICH one night, etc. In Latin the question is contained in the interrogative modifiers of imperium and not in the main clause.

FIG. 41

IV. PERORATIO (§§ 20–24)

Sects. 20–24. Cicero is undismayed: his fame is secure. He has undertaken a perpetual war with the bad elements in the state; but the result is certain. Then let the Senate dare to act rigorously.

151 29 (SECT. 20.) me . . . factorum: for cases, see § 221, b (); B. 209, 1; G. 377; H. 409, iii (457); H. & B.

152 1 gesta: abl. abs. with re publica.

152 3 (SECT. 21.) Scipio: the elder Africanus, who brought the Second Punic War to a triumphant close by the battle of Zama, B.C. 202. By "carrying the war into Africa," he forced Hannibal to retire from Italy.

152 5 alter Africanus: the younger, surnamed Æmilianus. He was son of L. Æmilius Paulus (mentioned below), and adopted by the son of the elder Africanus. He captured Carthage, B.C. 146, and Numantia, in Spain, B.C. 133.

152 7 Paulus: father of the younger Africanus, and, like his son, the most eminent and upright man of his generation. He brought the Third Macedonian War to a close by the battle of Pydna, B.C. 168, and led King Perseus captive in his triumphal procession. — currum [triumphalem] : the captives did not go with or behind the triumphal chariot, but preceded it in the procession.

152 9 bis liberavit : by the victories over the German invaders, — over the Teutones at Aquæ Sextiæ (B.C. 102), and the Cimbri at Vercellæ (B.C. 101).

152 10 Pompeius : it should be remembered that Pompey was now in the East, in the midst of his career of conquest, and that his return was looked for with expectancy by all parties. Cicero took every means to win the confidence of the great general, and gain him over to his views in public affairs ; but to no purpose. After some wavering, Pompey associated himself with Cæsar, thus giving the Senate a blow from which it never recovered, and preparing the way for his own downfall.

152 13 aliquid loci : § 216, a, 3 (); B. 202, 2 ; G. 369 ; H. 397, 3 (442) ; H. & B. .

152 16 (SECT. 22.) quamquam, and yet. — uno loco, in one respect.

152 18 oppressi serviunt, are crushed and enslaved ; § 292, R. () ; cf. B. 337, 2 ; H. & B. .

153 1 (SECT. 23.) pro imperio, in place of : all these honors, which Cicero might have gained by a foreign command, he has renounced in order to stay at home and protect the city.

153 4 clientelis hospitibusque : the relation of cliens to patronus was that of a subordinate to a superior, carrying with it services on the one side and protection on the other ; the hospites were, on the other hand, equals, and their connection was one of mutual aid and friendship. Foreign states and citizens were eager to form such ties with influential Romans, and they were equally advantageous to the Roman. Of course a provincial governor had peculiar opportunities for this.

153 5 urbanis opibus, the means afforded by a city life. Such ties would be more easily formed by a sojourn in a province, but they could also be formed by a statesman who remained at home ; for the value of such a relation to the provincial consisted in the opportunities for protection and assistance which the statesman possessed in the city itself.

153 6 pro meis studiis, in return for my efforts.

153 10 quæ dum, and as long as this. — mentibus : § 254, a () ; cf. B. 228, 1 ; H. 425, 1² (485, 1) ; H. & B. .

153 15 suo solius : § 197, e () ; B. 243, 3, a ; G. 321, *R.*² ; H. 398, 3 (446, 3) ; H. & B. .

153 20 (SECT. 24.) eum . . . qui, a consul who, etc.; § 102, d (171. 1000); B. 247, 1, a; H. & B.

153 22 per se ipsum praestare, make good [so far as he may] on his own part.

ORATION FOR ARCHIAS

ARGUMENT

CHAP. I. Exordium. Cicero's obligations to Archias. — 2. He justifies the unusual tone of his argument. — Narratio. 3. Early career of Archias: he is enrolled as a citizen of Heraclia. — Confirmatio. 4. His technical claim: his registry, acts of citizenship, domicile. — 5. Argument from the public records. — 6. The case is now closed. Further argument is unnecessary. Literature an indispensable relaxation, and also a source of moral strength. — 7. All famous men have been devoted to letters. — 8, 9. Great artists are of themselves worthy of admiration. The poet is especially sacred: he is the herald of fame. — 10. Greek is a surer passport to fame than Latin. Men inferior to Archias have been honored with citizenship. — 11, 12. Fame is the strongest motive to acts of public virtue. Literature is the most enduring of monuments. — Peroratio. 12 (sect. 31). Appeal to the court to protect Archias the poet in his rights.

I. EXORDIUM (§§ 1-3)

Sects. 1-3. Cicero's obligations to Archias make it a duty to undertake his defence. The unusual tone of the argument justified.

PAGE 154. LINE 1. (SECT. 1.) iudices, i.e. the members of a special court (quaestio) established by the Lex Papia (see Intro. to the oration, p. 154) to inquire into cases arising under that law.

154 3 versatum: cf. the date of the defence of Roscius and the opening passage of that oration. — huiusce rei, i.e. dicendi.

155 1 ratio, knowledge, i.e. theoretic acquaintance, contrasted with exercitatio, practice.

155 3 A. Licinius: following the custom of naturalized foreigners, as well as freedmen, Archias had taken the gentile name of his noble friends and patrons, the Luculli. Cicero's motive in always speaking of him by his Roman name is obvious.

155 6 inde usque, from as far back as that, I say.

155 7 principem, master.

155 8 rationem, course. For the connection of the meanings of this word, see Vocab.

155 10 a quo relates to huic, which is dat. after ferre; quo relates to id: surely, to the man himself from whom I have received that whereby, etc.

155 11 ceteris, all the rest [of my fellow-citizens], i.e. other than Archias. — alios, some of them.

155 12 opem corresponds to opitulari; salutem, to salvare.

155 14 (SECT. 2.) neque, and not.

155 15 dicendi ratio aut disciplina, art or science of oratory. — ne nos quidem, etc., i.e. not even I, though by profession an orator, have devoted myself to oratory alone.

155 20 (SECT. 3.) quaestione legitima: see note on iudices, p. 154, l. 1.

155 22 severissimos, i.e. before men of the old Roman stamp, who might not be favorably impressed by such praise of literature.

155 24 forensi sermone is not used here in its special meaning, "the language of the courts," but in its wider sense, the language of the Forum, i.e. the ordinary tone of practical affairs (the Forum being the centre of Roman business and politics).

155 27 ut . . . patiamini, a purp. clause in appos. with veniam (l. 25).

155 28 hoc concursu, loc. abl. expressing the circumstances; so also hac vestra humanitate, with men of your cultivation.

155 29 hoc praetore: Q. Cicero was himself a poet and man of critical taste.

155 30 paulo . . . liberius, with somewhat unusual freedom: § 93, a (); B. 240, 1; G. 297; H. 444, 1 (498); H. & B. .

155 31 otium ac studium, a quiet life of study (almost hendiadys); so iudiciis periculisque below.

II. NARRATIO (§§ 4-6)

Sects. 4-6. Earlier career of Archias. His celebrity in Asia and elsewhere. His removal to Rome and his distinguished patrons there. He becomes a citizen of Heraclia.

156 3 (SECT. 4.) cum, causal, but best translated when.

156 4 esset: for tense, see § 337, b. 1 (); B. 268, 4; G. 597, R.⁴; H. 527, iii (647); H. & B. .

156 5 asciscendum fuisse: in the direct, asciscendus erat: § 308, d (); B. 304, 3, b; G. 597, R.³ a; H. 511, 2 (582); H. & B. ;

cf. note on Pompey's Mil. Command, sect. 49 (p. 88, l. 32), erat deligendus.

156 9 urbe: § 184, c (); G. 411, R.³; II. 363, 4² (393, 7); H. & B.

156 12 contigit: sc. ei, i.e. Archias. — post, afterwards.

156 15 (SECT. 5.) tunc, at that time. This was the long period of comparative quiet between the Gracchan disturbances (B.C. 133–121) and the tribunate of Drusus (B.C. 91), which was followed by the Social War and the civil wars of Marius and Sulla.

156 16 Latio: not the geographical Latium merely, but all towns which at that time possessed Latin citizenship; that is, the Latin colonies, such as Venusia, the birthplace of the poet Horace.

156 21 de ingeniis, i.e. could form some opinion about the talents of literary men.

156 23 absentibus, people at a distance. — Mario et Catulo (cos. B.C. 102); of these, Marius was renowned for his exploits, while Catulus was a good officer, and also a man of culture.

156 25 nactus est, etc., he happened to find holding the consulship. — eos quorum alter, men of such a kind that one of them, etc. This would not only furnish him with themes for his poetry but insure appreciation of his genius.

156 27 Luculli: Lucius, the one who fought against Mithridates, and his brother Marcus: both of them belonged to the highest ranks of the aristocracy, and were men of distinguished taste and culture.

156 29 ingeni, pred. gen. after an understood erat: this was [a proof] not only of his genius, etc.

156 30 ut . . . esset, result clause in app. with hoc (l. 29).

157 1 (SECT. 6.) iucundus, etc.: ever since the introduction of Greek culture at Rome, it had been customary for cultivated Romans of high rank to entertain Greek men of letters in their houses, partly as tutors and partly as companions. Such associates frequently accompanied their patrons on their journeys and even on their campaigns. — Metello Numidico: the most distinguished member of this family. He was predecessor of Marius in the war against Jugurtha, and from this service in Numidia received his agnomen.

157 2 Aemilio, i.e. M. Æmilius Scaurus (cos. B.C. 115), for many years princeps senatus.

157 3 Catulo: see note on p. 156, l. 23. — L. Crasso: the most distinguished orator of his time, a man of genius and culture (see Introd., ch. ii, p. xxxiv); he died B.C. 91.

157 4 Drusum (M. Livius), tribune B.C. 91, a distinguished orator and statesman, who lost his life in a vain attempt to reconcile the aristocratic and democratic factions in the republic. — Octavios: see Cat. iii., sect. 24. — Catonem: probably the father of the famous Cato of Utica is meant.

157 5 Hortensiorum: the most eminent of these was Q. Hortensius, the rival of Cicero and his opponent in the case of Verres.

157 8 si qui forte, those (if there were any) who, etc.

157 11 Heracliam: an important Greek city, on the southern coast of Lucania. In the war with Pyrrhus it had fought on the side of the Romans, and B.C. 278, it entered into an alliance of the closest and most favorable character (aequissimo iure ac foedere).

III. CONFIRMATIO (§§ 7-30)

Sects. 7-11. Archias received Roman citizenship under the Lex Plautia-Papiria, complying with all the provisions of that law. The evidence of this cannot be shaken; the testimony of the census is unnecessary. No further argument is needed; the case is closed.

157 15 (SECT. 7.) Silvani lege, etc., i.e. the Lex Plautia-Papiria, of the tribunes M. Plautius Silvanus and C. Papirius Carbo (not to be confounded with his infamous cousin Cneius, the Marian leader after the death of Cinna), extended the Roman citizenship to all Italian communities which had not yet received it. These towns now exchanged their independence for Roman citizenship, and became incorporated with the republic; though many of them, as Heraclia, hesitated about making the change, and did it with great reluctance. They lost all rights of independent government (such as that of coining money, the ius exsili, etc.). Latin became the official language; justice was administered by Roman law; and in most cases their government was organized on the model of Rome, having duumviri for consuls, and a curia for the Senate. The passage here given from the Plautian-Papirian Law contains its application to citizens of foreign birth, like Archias. — si qui, etc.: the law is quoted in indir. disc., but the main clause is omitted, being implied in data est; see § 341, c (); G. 663, 2, b; H. & B. .

157 18 essent professi, should have declared their intention.

157 19 Q. Metellum [Pium], prætor, B.C. 89: the most eminent living member of this family, and one of the leaders of the aristocracy.

157 22 (SECT. 8.) Grati, the complainant (see Introd., p. 154 of text).

158 1 religione, conscientiousness.

158 6 desideras, call for (lit. miss, feel the want of). — Italico bello,

(i.e. the Social War): § 259, a (); G. 394, R.; H. 429 (486); H. & B. .

158 11 municipi: since the bestowal of the Roman citizenship, the Italian civitates had become Roman municipia (see Introd., p. liii).

158 12 idem, you yourself (lit. the same man).

158 15 (SECT. 9) In sect. 8 Cicero shows that Archias was a citizen of Heraclia and so came under the first requirement of the law; in sect. 9 he claims that his client had also complied with the other two requirements (domicilium and professio). — civitatem datam, i.e. by the law before cited.

158 17 professione, list of declarations.

158 18 conlegio: the prætors, when regarded as a whole, could be spoken of as a "board."

158 19 cum, while. — Appi, i.e. Appius Claudius, husband of Cæcilia (the friend of Roscius: see Rosc. Am., sect. 50) and father of the infamous Clodius.

158 20 Gabini: see Introd. to Pompey's Military Command.

158 21 damnationem: he was condemned, B.C. 54, for extortion on complaint of the Achæans.

158 23 L. Lentulum: nothing further is known of him; he probably presided over a court (iudices) to determine cases involving citizenship under the new law.

158 29 (SECT. 10.) multis and praeditis are dat. after impertiebant; arte, abl. after praeditis.

158 30 Graecia, i.e. Magna Græcia, the Greek cities of Italy.

158 31 credo (ironical), I suppose. — Locrensis: Locri Epizephyrii, a Greek city near Rhegium.

158 32 quod relates to id, which is governed by largiri understood.

159 1 ingeni limits gloria, which depends on praedito.

159 2 civitatem datam, i.e. by the Lex Plautia-Papiria.

159 3 legem Papiam: see Introd. to the Oration, p. 154 of text.

159 4 illis, sc. tabulis, i.e. of Tarentum, Rhegium, and Naples.

159 6 (SECT. 11.) census: the lists of citizens made out by the censors for purposes of taxation. These were, of course, excellent evidence on a question of citizenship; but they were not needed in this case. — requiris: cf. desideras in the same sense in sect. 8 (p. 158, l. 6).

159 7 est obscurum (ironical), it is not generally known. — proximis, abl. of time: translate by under. The censors referred to were L. Gellius and Cn. Lentulus (B.C. 70.) — clarissimo: observe the art with which Cicero here again calls attention to the connection of Archias with the distinguished Romans any one of whom could at any moment have procured him the citizenship if he had not already possessed it.

159 8 apud exercitum, i.e. in the war against Mithridates (see Oration for the Manilian Law). — superioribus, sc. censoribus. New censors were regularly appointed every five years: those here referred to were Q. Marcius Philippus and M. Perperna (B.C. 86). In the present instance the succession had been interfered with by Sulla, but restored in B.C. 70.

159 9 in Asia: this was in the First Mithridatic War, in which Lucullus served as quæstor to Sulla. — primis, i.e. the first after the passage of the Lex Plautia-Papiria: these were L. Julius Cæsar and P. Crassus (B.C. 89).

159 14 esse versatum (sc. eum), had availed himself of: this clause is the obj. of criminaris. — testamentum, etc., acts which no foreigner could do.

159 16 in beneficiis, etc.: his name was reported for a reward from the state (i.e. on the ground of some special merit): this, of course, implied citizenship.

159 18 suo, etc., i.e. Archias and his friends knew that he was a citizen and had acted as such, whatever might be said on the other side.

At this point Cicero practically rests his case. The remainder of his speech is devoted to the praise of poetry and literature. This eulogy is, however, skilfully connected with the argument. Literature is useful in the state, he contends, and poets are particularly in favor with great men. Hence Archias could not have failed to receive the citizenship as a gift from some of his illustrious Roman friends if he had not held it already. Since he is a citizen, so eminent and useful a man should be protected in his rights.

Sects. 12-16. Literature is an indispensable relaxation: and also a source of moral strength. Hence all famous men have been devoted to letters. The dignity and delight of liberal study.

159 20 (SECT. 12.) ubi (= locum ubi) . . . reficiatur, rel. clause of purpose.

159 22 suppetere has for subject the suppressed antecedent of quod. — posse (with a fut. force), should be able.

159 24 contentionem, strain.

159 25 ego (emphat.), etc., for my part I admit, etc. We should remember that the more old-fashioned of Cicero's contemporaries were still inclined to regard literary and artistic pursuits as frivolous in comparison with the more "truly Roman" professions of war and politics (cf. Æneid, vi. 847 ff.). Hence it was important for Cicero to show that literature was of practical value to the man of affairs.

159 26 his studiis, the study of letters in general, including all varieties of literature, poetry as well as prose.

159 30 nullius tempore, etc., the necessities or interests of no one (i.e. as a client).

160 1 (SECT. 13.) ceteris depends on conceditur (l. 4).

160 3 ad ipsam requiem, even to repose.

160 4 temporum limits quantum (l. 3), which has tantum (l. 6) for antecedent. — alii: notice how this differs in meaning from ceteris (l. 1), — the first mentioned pursuits (attending to business, celebrating festivals, etc.), are common to everybody, the last (being dissipations) belong only to "some people." — tempestivis conviviis, early dinners, i.e. beginning by daylight, or in business hours, — a mark of luxury and idleness: we should refer to "late dinners."

160 8 oratio et facultas, hendiadys. — quantacumque, etc., i.e. such as I have (a modest disclaimer).

160 9 periculis: Cicero prided himself on defending cases rather than acting for the prosecution (cf. amicorum temporibus, etc., Pompey's Mil. Command, sect. 1).

160 10 quae, i.e. the mere ability to speak. — illa (obj. of hauriam), i.e. the moral character resulting from the praecepta mentioned below.

160 12 (SECT. 14.) multorum, i.e. great minds whose thoughts have found expression in literature. — multis litteris, wide reading.

160 13 nihil esse, etc.: these doctrines had been the commonplaces of philosophy and letters for hundreds of years before Cicero wrote, and to the cultivated Roman they took the place which with us belongs to the ethical teachings of sacred literature.

160 16 parvi, of slight account; § 252, a (); B. 169, 4; G. 379, 380, 1; H. 404 (448); H. & B. .

160 19 exemplorum, i.e. examples of heroism and virtue recorded in literature. The moral education of the ancients consisted largely in the study of the lives of eminent men of past ages.

160 21 accederet, were thrown upon them.

160 27 (SECT. 15.) Observe the attitude of the Romans toward literature, which they valued as a source of ethical and political cultivation, and not, like the Greeks, for its own sake or as a means of affording æsthetic pleasure.

161 9 (SECT. 16.) ex hoc, etc.: Cicero enumerates the most distinguished patrons of the newly introduced Greek culture. Cato is separated from the rest because he was in theory opposed to this tendency on account of its imagined ill effects; hence the rather apologetic tone in which Cicero speaks of him.

161 10 Africanum : Scipio the younger (Æmilianus).—Lælium : the younger Lælius (surnamed Sapiens), whose friendship with Scipio Æmilianus forms the groundwork of Cicero's famous treatise De Amicitia.—Furium : L. Furius Philus (cos. B.C. 136) a patron of literature. These three men belonged to the so-called Scipionic Circle, which was especially influential in the introduction of Greek culture.

161 12 Catonem : M. Porcius Cato, called the Censor, was one of the leading men of Rome in the first half of the second century B.C. : a shrewd, hard-headed Roman of the old school, full of prejudices, and priding himself on his blunt manners. He was a distinguished antiquarian, and wrote books on antiquities and agriculture.

161 13 senem : he gives the name to Cicero's dialogue on Old Age (Cato Maior).

161 15–23 quod si, etc. : even if literature, Cicero argues, had no great practical or ethical value (as it has), it would still be worthy of respect as a means of mental refreshment and diversion. The passage is a very famous tribute to liberal studies.

161 18 ceterae, sc. animi adversiones (from l. 17).

161 21 adversis [rebus], dat. with praebent.

Sects. 17–24. Great artists are themselves worthy of admiration. The poet is especially sacred : he is the herald of fame. Alexander at the tomb of Achilles.

161 25 (SECT. 17.) deberemus : 308, c, N.¹ () ; B. 304, 3, a, N. ; G. 597, R.³, b ; cf. H. 511, I. N.³ (583) ; H. & B. .

161 26 videremus : subj. because an integral part of the cont. to fact apodosis.

161 27 Rosci : Q. Roscius, the most eminent actor of his time, defended by Cicero in a speech which is still extant.

161 30 corporis : observe the emphatic position as opposed to animorum (l. 31). In the ancient drama the action was much more important as compared with the delivery and facial expression than is the case on the modern stage.

162 2 (SECT. 18.) novo genere : such praise of letters was, of course, an innovation on the formal proceedings of a Roman court.—quotiens, etc. : given as a remarkable instance of poetical improvisation illustrating the celeritas mentioned in l. 31, above.

162 5 revocatum [hunc], subj. of dicere. The encore was a common Roman practice, as with us.

162 10 sic, this (referring to the indir. disc. that follows).

162 14 Q. Ennius: the father of Latin poetry. He was born at Rudiae in Magna Græcia (B.C. 239), but wrote in Latin. His principal work was the Annales, an epic poem upon Roman history, lost except for a few fragments.

162 19 (SECT. 19.) bestiae, etc.; alluding to the myths of Orpheus and Arion (see Ovid, Met. x. 3, Fasti, ii. 83-118; Virg. Ecl. viii. 56).

162 21 Homerum, etc.: the names of the cities which thus claimed Homer are given in the following hexameter verse:

Smyrna, Chios, Colophon, Salamis, Rhodos, Argos, Athenae.

162 27 olim, almost equiv. to an adj.; cf. § 188, e (); G. 439, N.⁴; H. 359, N.⁴ (497, 5); H. & B. .

162 29 Cimbricas res: the war with the Cimbri and Teutones, who invaded Italy and were at length defeated by Marius (the Teutones, B.C. 102; the Cimbri, 101).

162 30 durior: Marius was a rude and illiterate soldier. The illustration (p. 163) shows what seems to be the most trustworthy portrait of Marius (from the impression of a coin, now lost); various busts have been identified with him, but without any probable evidence.

163 3 (SECT. 20.) Themistoclem: the great Athenian statesman and general, who won the battle of Salamis, in the second Persian invasion (B.C. 480), and afterwards, by his skilful policy, raised Athens to its greatest height of power.

163 8 (SECT. 21.) For the statements in this section, see Oration for Manilian Law.

163 14 natura et regione, hendiadys.

163 17 eiusdem, i.e. Lucullus.

163 19 nostra, as ours (predicate), agreeing with pugna. Cicero means that these exploits, since they have been immortalized by Archias, will always remain the glory of the Roman people.

164 3 quae, these things (just mentioned); quorum limits ingeniis and refers to eis.

164 4 (SECT. 22.) Africano superiori: the conqueror of Hannibal.

164 5 in sepulcro Scipionum: this tomb on the Appian Way has been discovered, and in it a bust of peperino (not marble), which has by some been supposed to be that here referred to. It now stands upon the sarcophagus of Scipio in the Vatican museum (Fig. 42).

FIG. 42

164 8 huius: M. Porcius Cato, later called Uticensis, from his killing himself at Utica after Cæsar's victory. Cato the Censor was his great-grandfather.

164 10 Maximi, etc.: Q. Fabius Maximus, "the shield of Rome," in the Second Punic War; M. Marcellus, "the sword of Rome" (see note on p. 48, l. 5); Q. Fulvius Flaccus, a distinguished officer in the same war.

164 11 illum, i.e. Ennius.

164 13 Heracliensem: Heraclia (see note on p. 157, l. 11), as being an important city, is here contrasted with the insignificant Rudiaë. — civitatibus: § 232, a (); G. 354; H. 388, 1 (431, 2); H. & B. .

164 18 (SECT. 23.) Graeca leguntur, Greek is read. Greek was, in the ancient world, almost the universal language of polite society; cf. the use of French in modern times.

164 21 quo (whither) relates to eodem (thither); cupere governs the clause quo . . . penetrare.

165 1 populis, dat. after ampla, a noble thing for them.

FIG. 43

COIN OF CATO UTICENSIS

165 2 eis, i.e. the individuals by whom these exploits are performed as contrasted with their peoples as a whole.

165 10 (SECT. 24.) Magnus, i.e. Pompey.

Sects. 25-30. Many would have been glad to give Archias the citizenship if he had not already possessed it. All men thirst for glory, which he can confer. Literature is the most enduring of monuments.

165 17 (SECT. 25.) esset: § 308, a (); B. 304, 2; G. 597, R.¹; H. 510, N.² (579, 1); H. & B. .—civitate donaretur: § 225, d (); B. 187, i, a; G. 348; H. 384, ii, 2 (426, 6); H. & B. .

165 18 donaret, sc. civitate.

165 19 repudiasset: the protasis is implied in petentem.—quem, subj. of iubere, below.

165 20 de populo, of the people, i.e. of low birth.—quod . . . fecisset, which he had made as an epigram (poetical address) to him; for gender, see § 195, d (); B. 250, 3; cf. G. 211, R.⁵; H. 445, 4 (396, 2); H. & B. .

165 21 tantummodo . . . longiusculis, merely with the alternate verses a little longer, i.e. it was written in some metre in which (as in elegiac verse) long and short lines alternated; tantummodo implies that this was its only merit.

165 22 eis rebus: i.e. confiscated goods. Apparently a commander could take out from the booty anything he desired to bestow upon a soldier as a reward; and here the confiscated goods are treated in the same manner.

165 30 (SECT. 26.) pingue atque peregrinum, cognate accusatives; § 240, a (); B. 176, 2, b, N.; G. 333, 2, N.⁶; H. 371, ii (409 and 1); H. & B. .

166 2 prae nobis ferendum, a thing to be proud of.

166 3 optimus quisque: § 93, c (); B. 252, 5, c; G. 318, 2; H. 458, i (515, 2); H. & B. .

166 5 in eo ipso, in the very act.

166 6 praedicari, impersonal.

166 7 (SECT. 27.) Brutus: D. Junius Brutus (cos. B.C. 138) conquered the Lusitanians (of Portugal).

166 8 Acci: L. Accius (less properly Attius), a tragic poet (born B.C. 170); distinguished for vigor and sublimity; he lived long enough for Cicero in his youth to converse with him.

166 10 Fulvius: M. Fulvius Nobilior (cos. B.C. 189) subdued Ætolia.

He was distinguished as a friend of Greek literature, and built, from the spoils of war, a temple to Hercules and the Muses.

166 12 prope armati, having scarce laid aside their arms.

166 14 togati: see note on p. 125, l. 17.

166 18 (SECT. 28.) quas res, i.e. the suppression of Catiline's conspiracy.

166 23 adornavi, I supplied him with materials (i.e. facts).

166 25 quid est quod, etc.: § 317, 2 (); B. 282, 2; G. 631, 2; H. 497, i (590); H. & B. .

166 30 (SECT. 29.) nec tantis, etc.: here the apod. begins.

167 5 (SECT. 30.) parvi animi, mean-spirited: § 215 (); B. 203, 1; G. 365; H. 396, v (440, 3); H. & B. .

167 9 imagines, busts. Whoever held any curule office (dictator, consul, interrex, prætor, curule ædile) thereby secured to his posterity the ius imaginum, i.e. the right to place in their halls and carry in funeral processions a wax mask of him as well as of any other deceased members of the family of curule rank. Since this right was a distinguishing mark of the Roman nobility, it was naturally highly prized.

IV. PERORATIO (§ 31)

Sect. 31. Archias the poet should be protected in the rights of citizenship, which are legally his.

167 20 (SECT. 31.) pudore eo, of such high character (i.e. sense of honor and self-respect, as contrasted with the unprincipled Greek hangers-on with whom Roman society was infested).

167 22 vetustate, i.e. long-continued friendship (see sect. 5).—id existimari depends on convenit, it is fitting.

167 24 videatis, subjunctive of integral part.

167 25 municipi, i.e. Heraclia.

167 26 comprobetur, subjunc. of characteristic.

167 28 ut, with accipiatis, p. 168, l. 2.

168 1 ex eo numero, i.e. of poets.

168 9 ab eo qui, etc.: Q. Cicero (see Introd., p. 154 of text).

The customs of the Romans in regard to letter-writing were much like our own: we have long letters and short letters to familiar friends, business letters, formal communications, and letters to known enemies. But in the details there was considerable difference,

There were two forms of material, — the tabellae ("tablets," whence we have tabellarius, "letter-carrier"), and the papyrus, or roll made from the pith of the papyrus reed. The tabellae were made of two or more very thin boards (tabulae) fastened together like a double slate, and covered on the inside with a thin coating of wax. The writing was done by scratching with a sharp-pointed metal instrument (the stilus), and erased, when necessary, with the other end of the same, which was left flat for the purpose. The rolls were made of the solid pith of the papyrus reed, sliced longitudinally, about a foot long, a quarter of an inch thick, and, in proportion to the diameter of the reed, an inch or two inches in width. This reed formerly grew abundantly in Egypt, but now is extinct there. It still survives in a wild state in Sicily, on the White Nile, and elsewhere. The slices were laid down as we lay down boards to make a floor, close together in two layers at right angles to each other, and pressed, dried, and polished so as to make a coarse kind of paper in squares, which were glued together in strips of convenient length.

The ancient writing shows all forms of capital letters, from the more than printed regularity of an official inscription to the almost illegible rudeness of school-boy scrawls and business documents, but no current hand of joined letters is anywhere found.

If the tabellae were used, they were closed with a string (linum); if the papyrus was used, it was rolled up and tied with a string. In either case the ultimate closure, as well as the authentication, was made by the sender's seal, in gypsum or wax, attached to the knot of the string.

The letter was addressed to the receiver on the outside in the dative (perhaps also in the accusative with ad).

There was no public post-office, but the administration had slaves provided beforehand as letter-carriers (tabellarii), and large business interests might have the same arrangement. Less frequent correspondents used chance facilities, or sent private slaves. It would appear also that persons whose special business it was to act as managers or commissionaires could be hired in the Forum.

The formal part of the letter was always in the third person, containing the name of the writer (in the nominative) and that of the recipient (in the dative). Usually there was added a formal expression of good will: "Salutem plurimam dicit" (or salutem dicit, or merely salutem¹), frequently abbreviated to S. P. D. (S. D. or S.).

Of course a signature was unnecessary. If the letter was dictated, the seal was the only authentication. It was customary to close the letter with Vale ("farewell").

If the date was given, it was in the form of the ablative or locative of the place, and the day of the month (according to Roman reckoning), preceded by the word data (sc. epistola), i.e. "given" (to the messenger from the place mentioned).

FIG. 44. — WRITING IMPLEMENTS

When Cicero's letters were written, this form of composition was hardly recognized as literature. Still, great care was often used in letter-writing, and copies may have been kept for publication. Tiro, Cicero's favorite freedman and private secretary, is thought to have collected his master's letters and given them to the world. Somewhat later, however, epistolary writing became more or less a literary genre (as in the case of Pliny the younger); and in modern times the publication of correspondence has become very common.

I

169 1 ames, approve. For omission of ut, see § 331, f, R. (); B. 296, 1, a; G. 546, R.²; H. 499, 2 (565, 2); H. & B. . — ludos: to visit the games was fashionable with the Romans, like "going to the Derby" (races) in England. Hence to stay away was strength of mind (constantiam).

169 2 ὑποσβολιχον, something of a solecism (an absurd or inconsistent action); see the etymology and meanings of solecism in any large English dictionary. Greek was the "polite language" of ancient times, as French is to-day. All cultivated Romans could speak and write Greek, and it was the fashion to use Greek phrases in society and in letter-writing, as we use savoir faire, comme il faut, préciser, and the like.

169 3 ἀναφαίνεσθαι (inf., subject of est), to appear, to let myself be seen. The participial construction (peregrinantem) is in accord with the Greek, which takes a participle after ἀναφαίνομαι; but the case of peregrinantem accords with the Latin idiom (acc., agreeing with the implied subject me). — delicate . . . inepte: the common jest about the freedom which respectable men allow themselves when away from home explains this passage. Cicero says that if he were to visit the Antian games, he might appear not merely to be self-indulgent (delicate), but even to be making a fool of himself (inepte) on his tour. Cf. Henry V in Shakspeare's play (act i, scene 2):

"We never valued this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give ourself
To barbarous license, as 'tis ever common
That men are merriest when they are from home."

170 2 ab: the Romans often dated from (rather than at) a place. Appii Forum and Tres Tabernae were villages on the Appian Way (see Acts xxviii. 15). Atticus was at Rome. Cicero has written one letter at Tres Tabernæ, and now despatches a second from his next stopping-place, Appii Forum. — dederam, I have written: on the epistolary tense, see § 282 (); B. 265; G. 252; H. 472, 1 (539, 1); H. & B. .

II

170 4 re publica, the condition of the state. — ego: the verb (scribam) is omitted; such ellipses are especially common in the epistolary style. — subtiliter, in detail.

170 5 hoc (degree of difference) . . . miserior, it is the more wretched.

170 6 dominatio, tyranny: especially used of unconstitutional rule, usurpation of power in a free state.

170 7 bonis, i.e. the aristocracy (as opposed to the rabble, who were not regarded as "good"), the conservatives (Cicero's party). — ita . . . ut tamen, though . . . still.

170 8 nunc . . . omnibus, is now, of a sudden, so hateful to all (both to the conservatives and the populace); omnibus is in the dat. with tanto in odio, which is equiv. to tam odiosa: § 234, a (); B. 192, 1; G. 359; H. 391, 1.

FIG. 45

(434, 2); H. & B. 000, o. — eruptura sit: indir. quest.; for tense, see § 334, a and N.(); cf. B. 269, 3; G. 515; H. 529, ii, 4 (649, ii, 1); H. & B.

170 9 horreamus, we shudder to think. — illo-rum, Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus, — the so-called First Triumvirate.

170 10 Catoni, afterwards called Uticensis (from Utica, the place of his suicide), the leader of the Conservative or Old Republican party, — an uncompromising aristocrat and enemy of Cæsar, upright and patriotic, but narrow-minded and impracticable. His death afterward caused him to be regarded as a martyr to ancient liberty. His daughter Porcia was the wife of Brutus, the conspirator.

170 11 videbantur: the force of the imperf. may be reproduced by translating formerly they seemed. — venenis: poisoning was not uncommon at Rome; hence this figure was natural to a Roman.

GIRL WRITING A LETTER

170 12 sibilis volgi, by the hisses of the common people.

170 13 exarserint, have become infuriated. The actions of the "triumvirs" are such that Cicero thinks they have lost patience, and are ready to resort to open violence.

170 15 orbem . . . conversum, i.e. that the revolution in the state had been accomplished. To keep the figure expressed in orbitam (rut, wheel mark), we may translate, that the wheel of the government had made a complete revolution.

171 1 fuisset, it would have been (apodosis, contrary to fact).

171 2 homines, people (i.e. the Romans and Italians in general, who have not been able to let the revolution take place without expressing their feelings).

171 5 amicus, i.e. Pompey. — insolens infamiae, not accustomed to ill-repute.

171 6 deformatus corpore: this probably means merely that his health and personal appearance had suffered from his anxiety and chagrin.

171 7 progressum . . . reditum (observe the chiasmic order), i.e. the way before him is a headlong descent, and if he turns back, there is no firm footing. The figure is uncommonly vigorous and condensed.

171 8 bonos, i.e. the optimates (see note on p. 170, l. 7). — inimicos (pred. acc.), as his enemies.

171 10 mollitiem animi, my tenderness of heart. — non tenui lacrimas, could not keep back the tears. — illum, i.e. Pompey.

171 11 edictis Bibuli: M. Calpurnius Bibulus, Cæsar's colleague in the consulship of B.C. 59, was such a nonentity that the year was jocosely spoken of as "the consulship of Julius and Cæsar" (instead of "Bibulus and Cæsar"). Cæsar was anxious to pass certain bills, — especially an act for the division of the public land among the poorer citizens and an act to legalize the acts of Pompey in Asia. Bibulus shut himself up in his house, whence he issued edicts opposing Cæsar's bills, and assailing him and Pompey with unmeasured abuse. These edicts made a great noise but had no permanent effect. — contionantem, addressing the people (in reply to the edicts directed against him by Bibulus). For the nature of a contio, see p. 273.

171 12 illo in loco, i.e. in the Forum, where (or in the Comitium) such public meetings for address or debate were held.

171 13 ut, how (exclamatory).

172 1 Crasso: Crassus was an old enemy of Pompey's, and, though now his political partner, might be supposed to take secret satisfaction in his waning popularity.

172 3 lapsus quam progressus, i.e. rather to have got into his present position by carelessness than to have advanced into it with his eyes open.

172 6 pictum, etc.: Cicero refers to Pompey as a work of art and of himself as the artist. He has in mind the splendid encomium contained in the Oration for the Manilian Law (see pp. 66–97).

172 8 Clodianum negotium, the Clodius affair. In order to become eligible for the tribunate, Clodius had procured his adoption into a plebeian family. Pompey had countenanced this proceeding, acting as auspex at the ceremony. This was enough to estrange Cicero from him, as everybody thought, for Clodius was Cicero's bitterest enemy.

172 10 Archilochia: the Parian poet Archilochus, said to have invented iambic verse, was a proverbially savage satirist. The edicts of Bibulus handled both Pompey and Cæsar without gloves.

172 12 proponuntur, are posted up.

172 13 ipsi, i.e. to Pompey himself.

172 18 qui: § 104 a (); B. 90; G. 106; H. 188, ii, 1 (184, 1); H. & B. — sit . . . futurus: for tense, see note on p. 170, l. 8.

172 19 comitia . . . distulisset: Bibulus had issued an edict postponing the consular elections for the following year. They finally took place on October 18, when L. Calpurnius Piso (Cæsar's father-in-law) and A. Gabinius (a partisan of Pompey's: see p. 67) were elected. Such postponements were usually disliked by the common people.

172 21 iret ad Bibulum, i.e. to his house, to terrify him by a display of mob-violence.

172 22 vocem exprimere, squeeze out a single voice (in favor of this demonstration against Bibulus).

172 23 quid quaeris? what would you have? — sentiant, i.e. Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus.

172 24 partis, party. — eo magis, etc.: to carry through their plans the triumvirs may have to conciliate Clodius by sacrificing Cicero. — nobis (dat. of agent); equiv. to mihi.

172 25 eum, i.e. Clodius.

172 28 studia, good will, devotion. It was Cicero's weakness to exaggerate his own popularity.

172 29 cum, not only. — res . . . vocat, the circumstances themselves summon you (to Rome). — ad tempus illud, for that (critical) moment.

172 31 Varro, i.e. M. Terentius Varro, who had served under Pompey in the East.

172 32 divinitus (adv.), like one inspired. Pompey was full of professions of friendship, but he did nothing to prevent Cicero's exile.

172 33 discessuros, come out of the affair (the struggle with Clodius). — tu: emphatic. Cicero has been writing of his own travels; he closes with an inquiry about the doings of his correspondent.

172 34 cum Sicyoniis: Atticus was having difficulty in collecting a large sum of money which the Sicyonians owed him. The details of the transaction are not known, but it is several times mentioned in Cicero's letters.

III

173 3 me miserum: § 240, d (); B. 183; G. 343, 1; H. 381 (421); H. & B. — te (emphatic) . . . incidisse: exclam. inf.; § 274 (); B. 334; G. 534; H. 539, iii (616, 3); H. & B. , to think that you have, etc. Tulliolam . . . percipere (ll. 5-6) is in the same construction.

173 5 Tulliolam: Cicero's favorite child. Observe the pet name (diminutive of Tullia). — ex quo patre . . . ex eo, etc., should suffer such grief for her father, in whom she used to take so much delight! For the order of clauses, see § 201, c (), G. 620; H. 572, ii, N. (683, 2); H. & B. .

173 7 Cicerone: M. Tullius Cicero, only son of the orator, was born B.C. 65, and was therefore a mere boy at this time. He was educated at Athens, where he was studying when Brutus, after the death of Cæsar, visited that city on his way to Macedonia. Young Cicero joined the army of Brutus, and was present at the Battle of Philippi (B.C. 42). He made his peace with Octavius and was his colleague in the consulship in the year B.C. 30. The figure in the text

COIN OF BRUTUS AND CASCA

(p. 201) is from a medal struck in his honor by the Magnesians. — sapere, to know anything (be old enough to understand anything).

173 10 ab eis: the aristocratic party, who had not stood by Cicero in his struggle with Clodius.

173 11 qui petebant, i.e. the triumvirs (see preceding letter) or their party.

173 12 nostris, our own.

173 15 ne valetudo . . . desit, that sickness on my part may not thwart your efforts. Terentia showed much energy in working for her husband's recall and in managing his affairs during his exile. She had apparently expressed her fear that Cicero might fall a victim to the plague (see l. 21), but he promises to look out for his health. — res, the business (of procuring Cicero's recall).

173 16 quantoque . . . redire, how much easier it was to stay at home than (it is) to return (now that I am in exile).

173 17 habemus, have (on our side). •

173 20 familia, our slaves. What the advice of friends was is not certain. In a previous letter Cicero had said that his slaves were to be freed if his property were confiscated and he were not allowed to buy it in.

173 21 loco, this place, i.e. Thessalonica, where the body of the letter was written. A postscript was added at Dyrrachium.

173 22 Plancius: Cn. Plancius, at this time quaestor in Macedonia. He was afterward (B.C. 54) successfully defended by Cicero on a charge of corrupt political bargaining. The oration (Pro Cn. Plancio) is extant.

173 24 Hispo: who he was is unknown, perhaps an officer who was keeping his eye on Cicero's movements. Possibly Cicero uses Hispo as a nickname for his enemy, L. Calpurnius Piso, who had been active in procuring his banishment. — veniret: subjunc. of characteristic.

173 25 retinet: for tense, see § 276, a (); B. 259, 4; G. 230; H. 467, iii, 2 (533, 1); H. & B. .

174 2 Pisonis: C. Calpurnius Piso Frugi, the husband of Cicero's daughter, Tullia. He did everything in his power to procure Cicero's recall, but died (B.C. 57) shortly before it took place. Tullia afterwards married Dolabella (see p. 194).

174 5 Q. fratre: Cicero's brother Quintus, with whom Terentia had not been quite friendly.

174 7 egi, sc. eis gratias. — me a te, etc.: Terentia had informed her husband of the good offices of various friends and had asked him to thank them by letter.

174 10 puero: the younger Cicero; for case, see § 244, d (); cf. B. 218, 6; G. 401, R.⁷; H. 415, iii, N.¹; H. & B. .

174 13 tantum, so much only. — erunt in officio, do their duty, stand by us.

174 14 efficere, make out. — tua pecunia: Terentia's private fortune was considerable, and the estate which she meant to sell was probably her own.

174 15 ne . . . perdamus, not to ruin our boy, who is, indeed, ruined already. Observe the alliteration. — cui . . . egeat, if he has something to keep him from poverty, it will require only moderate courage, etc., on his part to achieve everything else.

174 19 iam brevis, at all events I have not long to wait now. The question of his recall will soon be decided one way or the other.

174 20 d. a. d. VI. K. Decemb., i.e. datae ante diem sextum Kalendas Decembris.

174 21-23 A postscript. See note on p. 173, l. 21, above.—libera civitas being a "free city," Dyrrhacium had the "right of exile" (ius exsili), i.e. though subject to Rome it was technically foreign territory, and exiles could live there unmolested.

IV

174 25 tui: genitive with indigebunt.—mei (subject of indigebunt), my family.—nostris . . . desis, not to fail [us in our] misfortunes.

V

175 1 Pollione: C. Asinius Pollio, now about twenty years of age. He afterwards became one of Cæsar's most trusted friends, and acted an important part in the events that followed the dictator's death; but he is best known as a lover of literature and a patron of Virgil and Horace. Virgil's fourth Eclogue was dedicated to him. He died A.D. 4, in his eightieth year.

175 4 fore ut infringatur: § 288, f (); B. 270, 3; G. 656; H. 537, 3 (619, 2); H. & B. .

175 5 ipsa die, by time itself: for gender, see § 73 (); B. 53; G. 64; H. 123 (135); H. & B. .

175 6 proditorum tuorum, those who have betrayed you.

175 7 secundo loco, in the second place.—temporum, misfortunes (his exile).

175 9 violatur, afflicta: observe the difference in the strength of the verbs; the honor of Lentulus is being attacked: Cicero's had been laid low.—quam mea, than [that in which] mine, etc.

175 12 praesta te eum qui, etc., show yourself that [same] man that I have known, etc., i.e. don't change your character now; be consistent with my knowledge of you.—a teneris unguiculis, i.e. from infancy. The Greek phrase is ἐξ ὀνύχων or ἐξ ἀπαλῶν ὀνύχων. Horace uses de tenero ungui.

175 14 hominum iniuria, the injustice that men do you.

VI

176 5 utrumque laetor, I am glad of two things. — et, both.

176 7 modo ut constiterit, etc., provided only you have derived some advantage from your leisure.

176 8 in ista amoenitate: Marius was at his villa near Stabiae on the Campanian shore. To enjoy the prospect of Misenum (see illustration, Greenough and Kittredge's Virgil, p. 161), he had opened a window looking out on the Bay of Cumæ. Stabianum perforasti seems to be corrupt.

176 12 lectiunculis, pleasant little readings. — cum (temporal), while.

176 13 istic, in that place of yours.

176 16 Sp. Maecius: Sp. Mæcius Tarpa, licenser of plays.

176 17 probavisset (subj. of characteristic), such plays as Mæcius had approved.

176 18 tui stomachi, to your taste. — meo, sc. stomacho.

177 1 in scaenam, etc.: i.e. certain famous actors who were past their prime had been induced to appear on this occasion, not to the advantage (Cicero thinks) of their reputation. The pun on honoris causa is obvious.

177 2 decēsse = decessisse: § 128, b(); B. 116, 4, c; G. 131, 4, 4; H. 235, 3 (238, 3); H. & B.

177 3 Aesopus: Claudius (or Clodius) Aesopus, the most celebrated tragic actor at Rome and a friend of Cicero's. He had retired from the stage, and was now very old, but he appeared (for the last time) on this occasion.

177 4 iurare, i.e. to recite some oath taken by a character in the play.

177 7 adparatus, etc.: the lavish display offended Cicero's taste, or so he says. The same criticism is often passed on modern performances.

177 9 carueris, got along without, dispensed with.

177 10 sescentis: used in Latin for any large number, as we say "a thousand." — Clytaemnestra, a lost tragedy of L. Attius, the celebrated Roman dramatist. Its subject was the murder of Agamemnon by his wife Clytemnestra on his return from the Trojan War. This is also the plot of the Agamemnon of Aeschylus. The mules probably carried Trojan booty, for we know that the play included Agamemnon's return from Troy.

Equo Troiano: a tragedy by Livius Andronicus, the earliest of Roman dramatists (third century, B.C.).

177 11 creterrarum (craterarum is the common form): these differed from the "properties" in the modern theatre in that they were real.

177 14 Protogeni: cultivated Romans employed highly trained slaves (usually Greeks) to read to them.

177 15 nē, adv., without doubt.

177 17 Oscos ludos, Oscan plays: rustic farces (fabulae Atellanae), said to have come originally from the Oscan town of Atella. They were very popular at Rome.

177 18 vel in senatu vestro: the local senate of the town, probably Stabiae. Cicero jestingly insinuates that their deliberations must be farcical enough.

178 1 ita non ames, you are so far from liking.

178 2 via Graeca: this road is said to have been out of repair. At all events, the jest at Marius' dislike of things Greek is obvious enough. —

FIG. 47

ÆDILE OPENING THE GAMES

athletas, apparently Greek athletes, imported to give éclat to the show, but less successful in pleasing the spectators than ordinary gladiators would have been.

178 3 gladiatores contempseris: perhaps an allusion to assistance rendered to Cicero against Clodius' band of roughs.

178 4 operam et oleum perdidisse, has wasted his pains and his money (lit. pains and oil): a proverbial expression for fruitless labor. Apparently it comes from the waste of "midnight oil" over plans that come to naught. Here, however, there is probably a punning allusion to the oil used by the athletes.

— Pompeius: the giver of the games (see p. 176).

178 9 neque nos, not even I.

178 11 volgi atque turbae, the vulgar rabble, the common herd: hendiadys; § 385 (); B. 374, 4; G. 698; H. 636, iii, 2 (751, 3, N.¹); H. & B.

178 12 misericordia: Pliny the Elder (Hist. Nat. viii. 7) tells an extraordinary story which illustrates the excitability of the Roman crowd. So far were they from being pleased with the slaughter of the elephants that when the beasts trumpeted with terror, and seemed "by a gesture impossible to describe" to beg mercy of the spectators, the beholders burst into tears, and, springing to their feet, called down curses on Pompey's head.

178 17 Canini: L. Caninius Gallus. Nothing is known of this case. — facilem, ready to spare me, or indulgent.

178 20 cum, not only (correlative with tum in l. 22).

178 22 non defendere, to refuse to defend (i.e. to take only such cases as I chose). — vita nulla est, this is no life for me.

178 26 quaero . . . arbitratu, I am seeking every possible pretext for living finally as I should like to live (arbitratu meo, lit. according to my own wishes), i.e. for getting rid of court business and devoting myself to literature and philosophy; aliquando implies that Cicero thinks it is high time to rest from his toilsome profession. His friend Marius was a man of leisure, apparently, — partly from choice and partly because of ill health.

178 28 quod-que, etc., and that you, etc.: the clause is in apposition with hoc, object of fero.

178 31 plane exsolvam, get rid of them entirely. Cicero does not affect a wish to leave public life altogether; he wishes for more leisure and greater independence.

178 33 commentaris, have been studying. — humaniter vivere, to live as a man of culture should.

179 2 mecum leticula . . . concursare, run about (i.e. make excursions) with me in my litter; leticula is literally abl. of means.

VII

179 11 L. filios, i.e. Luci (gen.) filios.

179 12 familiarissime utor, I am on very friendly terms. — maiozem in modum, particularly (suggesting that this is not a mere formal recommendation).

179 15 multas, many [of my letters of introduction] have had much influence with you.

179 17-18 gratissimos . . . gratissimum: cf. § 344, m (); B. 350, 10; G. 681; H. 563 (667); H. & B.

VIII

180 3 Britanniam: Trebatius had declined to accompany Caesar in his First Invasion of Britain. Cicero, doubtless somewhat disappointed, here suggests in a jocose way that it would have been for the interest of Trebatius to take part in the expedition.

180 5 verum tamen, but to be serious.

180 6 ultro, of his own accord, without anybody's asking him (Cæsar).

180 7 eo, Cæsar. — ad quem, to whose companionship.

180 9 in ista epistula, in that letter of yours.

180 10 curae: § 233, a (); B. 191; G. 356; H. 390, i (433); H. & B. . Cicero was always generous and painstaking in assisting young men of talent like Trebatius.

180 11 frigeas, take cold. Some have seen here a suggestion of a double meaning: "I fear you have not consulted your own interests in staying in winter quarters in Gaul instead of going to Britain." But the passage seems merely jocose. Trebatius was longing for the comforts of the city.

180 12 Mucio, etc.: Q. Mucius Scævola and M. Manilius, famous jurists of the previous century, whose "professional opinion" on the subject of keeping up a good fire in winter Cicero pretends to quote. — idem placebat, this was also the opinion of.

180 13 qui . . . abundares, since you had no great supply, etc. (when you left Rome). There is a jocose suggestion that Trebatius was not very well off when he set out on this campaign, and hence that he ought to look out for his own interests now. Perhaps there is a suggestion that Trebatius went away from Rome to mend his fortunes. Cicero is constantly reminding him that his campaign ought to make him well off.

180 14 calere: the Gauls were "making things warm" for the Romans.

180 16 natare: Trebatius was fond of swimming; yet, says Cicero, he would not go to Britain, even for the sake of sea baths.

180 17 essedarios: the war chariots of the Britons, which Trebatius, who was fond of sports, might have been supposed likely to find worth seeing. There is a pun on essedarii, a kind of gladiators.

180 18 andabata, gladiators of the lowest class, who fought blindfold. To care for them was a sign of passionate devotion to such sports. The suggestion is that surely a British chariot ought to have been an attraction to a man who never missed seeing the andabatae.

180 24 quid profecerim, how far I succeeded (in advancing your fortunes by the letter referred to).

180 25 facias (object of velim, sc. ut), etc., I should like to have you let me know.

181 2 id, i.e. your absence.

181 3 sin autem, etc.: again the suggestion that Trebatius is neglecting his opportunities.

181 4 qui (causal) . . . attraham, that I do not, etc.

181 6 pluris: see § 252, a (); B. 203, 4; G. 379, 380; H.

405 (44S, 4) ; II. & B. .—fratres, etc.: the Hædúi had been formally addressed as fratres consanguineique by the Roman Senate (see Cæsar, B. G. i. 33).

181 9 aut consolando, etc.: a line from one of Terence's comedies, Hautontimorumenos ("The Self-Tormentor"), i. 34; quoted as we might quote Shakspeare.

IX

181 10 quantae curae tibi fuerit, how zealous you have been for: for the two datives, see § 233, a () ; B. 191 ; G. 356 ; H. 390, i (433) ; H. & B. .—honos, the supplicatio, which Cato had opposed, but which had finally been decreed, after much wrangling. — quam . . . fueras, and how, as consul, you have shown the same disposition to honor me and increase my reputation that you and your parents and your whole family had always shown (lit. you have stood out as the same that you had always been, etc.); fuerit and exstiterit are indirect questions dependent on cognovi below.

181 14 quod . . . debeam, that I ought not to do it for your sake.

181 15 magni interest, it makes a great difference.

181 16 debeas, are indebted.

181 19 ita rem publicam, etc.: it cannot be said that Marcellus showed any great ability in his administration; but he was of Cicero's party.

181 20 ut . . . non recusem: clause of result after ita geris, etc.; quo minus . . . debeam (l. 21) depends on recusem.

181 22 exitus: the result of the agitation of Marcellus was the actual breaking out of the great Civil War and the destruction of the party to which he belonged. He was attached to the Pompeian party, and is best known for the vigor with which he opposed Cæsar at this time. After the Civil War he made his peace with Cæsar. His wife was Octavia, afterwards married to Mark Antony (see coin of Antony and Octavia, p. 183).

182 1 si . . . morabitur, unless I am obliged to postpone my voyage (lit. unless my voyage shall keep me waiting).

182 2 incurrebat, falls in with; for epistolary imperf., cf. note on p. 170, l. 2.

FIG. 48

COIN OF MARK ANTONY AND HIS BROTHER

X

182 (address) Q. Q., i.e. the two Quintuses, — Cicero's brother Quintus and the latter's son.

182 4 opportunitatem operae tuae, the advantage of your devotion.

182 6 quartanam: the disease appears, then, to be not a malignant fever, as had been feared, but a quartan ague.

182 7 Curius: M. Curius, a banker at Patræ, who was keeping Cicero informed of Tiro's condition.

182 8 id quod . . . tuae, as befits your refined culture. Cicero jestingly tells Tiro that so highly cultivated a man ought to have the wisdom to attend to nothing but recovery. He is anxious lest Tiro's devotion may lead him to resume his journey before he is strong enough.

182 13 ad urbem: he could not enter the city since he was still a military commander. — obviam . . . proditum: such a procession came out to meet me.

182 14 incidi, etc.: though Cæsar did not cross the Rubicon until July, B.C. 49, — more than six months after Cicero's arrival at the walls of the city, — yet the Civil War had virtually begun when this letter was written.

183 1 mederi: Cicero tried to mediate between Cæsar and Pompey. Apparently he did not perceive how inevitable the struggle was. Indeed, no contemporary could understand the significance of the great Civil War. To most of them it must have appeared merely a political struggle of unusual proportions. They could not see that the victory of Cæsar meant a new era in human civilization. Probably Cæsar himself was the only man then alive who had any conception of the true nature of the crisis. — certorum, particular persons (whom I could name).

183 3 omnino, in a word.

183 4 amicus: Cicero was at this time on good terms with the leaders of both parties. — minacis . . . litteras: Cæsar was proconsul in Gaul, and was candidate for the consulship, — an office which insured continuance of his military authority. His enemies wished him to disband his army, which, unless Pompey had done the same thing, would have been madness. His ultimatum (the letter here referred to) was received by the Senate Jan. 1, B.C. 49. Cæsar says that it made very easy demands (B.C. i. 5), and it certainly offered great concessions. But the Pompeians carried the day. The Senate voted that Cæsar must disband his army before a fixed date (probably Feb. 1) or be declared a public enemy. The tribunes interposed their veto, but were forced to flee from the city and take refuge with Cæsar at Ravenna. The Senate appointed Pompey dictator only a few days before this letter was written.

183 5 miserat, has sent: erat, is: incitabat (l. 6), is egging him on; profecti erant (l. 8), have gone (a colorless word — not taken refuge or the like); the tenses are “epistolary” (see note on p. 170, l. 2).

183 6 Curio meus: C. Scribonius Curio, a friend of Cicero’s (as his father had been), was tribune B.C. 50. He was a man of talent, but notoriously profligate, and owed immense sums ($3,000,000, it is said). Cæsar paid these debts and thus won him over from the Pompeians, to whose party he naturally belonged. In the disputes that preceded the crossing of the Rubicon, Curio acted with great adroitness. It was he who proposed that both Cæsar and Pompey should give up their military commands,—a proposition which put Pompey completely in the wrong, since he had no intention of becoming a private citizen, even for a moment. Curio fought on Cæsar’s side in the Civil War, and fell in Africa.

183 7 Antonius . . . Q. Cassius: the tribunes for B.C. 49, both partisans of Cæsar. — nulla vi expulsi: this is literally true; yet Antony and Cassius had certainly been threatened, and they fled from Rome disguised as slaves. Cæsar was at Ravenna, where they joined him.

183 9 nobis, us, i.e. Pompey and Cicero. Ordinarily the proconsuls were not included, but the whole object of the vote was to make Pompey practically dictator.

183 10 ne quid, etc.: the regular formula for proclaiming martial law (see note on p. 100, l. 12). It “had been a signal of death to the Gracchi, to Saturninus, to the Catilinarian conspirators.” But Cæsar was ready for the struggle, and the Pompeians, in whose hands the constitutional authority now technically rested, were absolutely unprepared for action.

183 13 ex hac quoque parte, on our side as well.

183 15 sero: Pompey was madly self-confident. His famous boast that he had but to stamp his foot to raise up soldiers was not justified by the event.

183 17 Lentulus: L. Cornelius Lentulus Crus, consul (with C. Claudius Marcellus) for B.C. 49; a violent Pompeian. He was friendly to Cicero, and had assisted him against Clodius, but he thought the application for a triumph inopportune when the state was in danger. Cicero suggests that he is delaying to make his services to Cicero seem the greater when he does bring forward the motion. But the passage is intentionally rather vague.

183 18 expedisset (= expedivisset: see note on p. 177, l. 2), etc., had made the necessary arrangements for the safety of the state (lit. had set in order [the things] which were necessary, etc.); expedisset is subord. clause in indir. disc. (for fut. perf. of the direct).

183 19 relaturum: it was the consul's business to bring such a matter before the Senate.

183 20 cupide: a just remark. Cicero was less actuated by selfish ambitions and low greed than almost any public man of his time. — pluris: gen. of price (see note on p. 181, l. 6); both parties were anxious to secure Cicero.

183 21 quisque, i.e. each of the officers mentioned in the decree spoken of above. — tuereter: indirect question.

183 22 Capuam: Cicero soon withdrew to Capua, which had thus been put in his charge. For his further movements, see pp. 185–186.

XI

184 (address) Tullius Terentiae, etc.: the address includes a greeting from Cicero to his wife Terentia and his daughter Tullia, and from Cicero's son Marcus (here called simply Cicero) to the same (matri, sorori). For S. P. D., see greeting in Letter X.

184 1 si vos valetis, etc.: a regular formula; cf. the old-fashioned "I write these few lines to inform you that I am in good health," etc. — vestrum (emphatic), it is for YOU to consider. The special question was, whether they should remain at Rome, whither Caesar was advancing rapidly.

184 2 ille, i.e. Caesar.

184 4 diripiendam, to be plundered: § 294, d (); B. 337, 7, b, 2; G. 430; H. 544, 2, N.² (622); H. & B. . Caesar's moderation in the moment of victory was contrary to all Roman precedent in civil wars; quite different from what was to be expected of the Pompeians. But Cicero could not foresee this. No one then knew that Caesar's plans were constructive, not merely revolutionary. — ut, that . . . not.

184 5 Dolabella: the husband of Cicero's daughter Tullia. He was a profligate and unscrupulous man, but high in Caesar's favor, and likely to be influential in protecting Cicero's family. See p. 194.

184 8 vestri similes, any ladies of your station; both Terentia and Tullia are meant. For case of vestri, see § 234 d, 2 (); B. 204, 3; G. 359, R.¹ and N.⁴; H. 391, ii. 4 (435, 4); H. & B. . — ne, whether.

184 9 ut, how (indirect question).

184 10 modo ut, provided only. — haec . . . loca, i.e. the Capuan territory, to which Cicero had been assigned as governor.

184 14 Camillo: C. Camillus, a lawyer, whom Cicero elsewhere speaks of as his close friend; Camillus was then at Rome. — videbitur, seem best.

184 15 rem meliorem fecit, has followed the better cause. Labienus, Cæsar's legatus in Gaul, had joined the Pompeian party.

184 16 Piso: L. Calpurnius Piso Cæsoninus, Cæsar's father-in-law, who had accompanied Pompey. He had once been a bitter enemy of Cicero. — sceleris: gen. of the charge; § 220 (); B. 208; G. 378; H. 409, ii (456); H. & B.

184 18 istic, where you are.

184 19 Rufus: probably Mescinius Rufus, who had been one of Cicero's quæstors in his Cilician province.

184 20 Kal., i.e. of February.

XII

185 1 S. v. b. e., i.e. si vales bene est (see note on p. 184, l. 1). — litteras, i.e. Cicero's letter of Feb. 15. — recognovi, i.e. in the letter.

185 2 consules: C. Marcellus and L. Lentulus, partisans of Pompey.

185 4 pro, in accordance with.

185 5 ut conferas: obj. of hortor; ut feramus: dep. on conferas.

185 7 facias: obj. of censeo; for the omission of ut, see § 331, f. R. (); B. 295, 8; G. 546, R.²; H. 499, 2 (565, 4); H. & B.

XIII

186 1 litteras, i.e. Cicero's letter of Feb. 15 (see introduction to Letter XVI). — Canusi, at Canusium in Apulia, where Pompey halted on his way from Luceria to Brundisium.

186 2 rei publicae causa: Pompey was the representative of lawful authority, being a proconsul with dictatorial power and having both consuls on his side. Cæsar was technically a rebel; Cicero elsewhere calls him a "tyrant" and a "Pisistratus."

186 3 fore ut . . . possemus: periphrasis for the fut. inf.; § 288 (); B. 270, 3; G. 248; H. 537, 3 (619, 2); H. & B.

186 4 concordiam: to the very last Cicero had hoped for a peaceful settlement of the quarrel (see note on p. 183, l. 1); but Pompey's flight had left Cæsar master of Italy.

186 5 dignitate: Pompey's conduct in abandoning Corfinium and fleeing from Italy was extremely mortifying to Cicero. He speaks of it in some of his letters to Atticus in terms of unmeasured contempt.

186 7 ad consules, for the consuls (i.e. to be carried to them).—consili : Pompey had sent orders by D. Lælius that one consul should join him at Luceria in Apulia and that the other should go to Sicily with such troops as had been collected about Capua. These orders he subsequently rescinded, on learning of the siege of Corfinium (see Att. viii. 12. A).

186 8 non exspectavi, etc., I did not wait for you to reply to my letter (i.e. the letter of March 15).—redderentur : § 328 (): B. 293 ; G. 572 ; H. 519 (603) ; H. & B.

186 9 -que, but.—in Apuliam : Pompey had written on Feb. 10, advising Cicero to join him at Luceria.

186 12 Caesarem . . . Aeserniae : a false rumor. Caesar was still besieging Corfinium.

186 14 si ita esset : subjunc. in subord. clause in ind. disc. ; Cicero's thought was, — si ita est, iter meum interclusum est.

186 15 exceptum, caught.

186 16 certum, trustworthy information.—ab Aesernia : ab is used because the news would come from the neighborhood of the town, not from within its walls ; § 258, a, N.¹ (); B. 229, 2 ; G. 391, R.¹ ; H. 412, ii, 3, N. (462, 3) ; H. & B.

186 19 misisses : subjunc. in informal ind. disc. ; § 341 (); B. 323 ; G. 508, 3 ; H. 528, 1 (649, i) ; H. & B.

187 1 litteras, etc. : here follows Pompey's letter reported in ind. disc. ; compare the same in the direct discourse as included by Cicero in a letter to Atticus (viii. 6) : Litterae mihi a L. Domitio ad. XIII Kalend.

FIG. 49

Mart. adlatae sunt : earum exemplum infra scripsi. Nunc, ut [i.e. although] ego non scribam, tua sponte te intellegere scio, quanti rei publicae intersit omnis copias in unum locum primo quoque tempore convenire. Tu, si tibi videbitur, dabis operam quam primum ad nos venias, praesidi Capuae quantum constitueris satis esse, relinquo.—L. Domitio : the commander at Corfinium. His letter informed Pompey that Caesar had encamped before the town. (See Fig. 49 : head of L. Domitius Ahenobarbus, from a coin.)

187 2 earumque . . . subscripseras, you appended a copy of this letter ; subscripseras is in the indic. because (though the statement actually stood in Pompey's letter : see note on l. 1) Cicero asserts the fact on his own authority and does not make it a part of the indir. disc. For the epistolary tense, see note on p. 170, l. 2.—exemplum, copy.

187 3 magni : see note on pluris, p. 181, l. 6.—rei publicae : § 222

(); B. 211; G. 381; H. 406, iii (449, 1); H. & B. . — primo quoque tempore, at the earliest possible moment (quoque, abl. of quisque).

187 4 ut . . . relinqueret: dependent on the idea of command implied in what precedes and in the general tone of the letter.

187 4 in unum locum: Cicero and "everybody else" (reliqui omnes) were wrong in supposing this mustering place was to be Corfinium. Pompey had no intention of trying to raise the siege of that town. He had determined to collect all his troops at Brundisium, there to embark for Dyrhacium in Illyria.

187 6 qua: translate by as.

187 7 ad Corfinium: § 258, b, N.² (); B. 182, 3; G. 337, R⁴; H. 380, ii, 1 (418, 4); H. & B. . Cf. ab Aesernia (p. 186, l. 17).

187 9 cum . . . esset, while we were awaiting results with the most intense anxiety. — utrumque simul, two things at the same time. The first of these two pieces of news is expressed in the form of an indir. question (quae . . . acta essent); the second in indir. disc. (te . . . coepisse). Both clauses are in apposition with utrumque.

187 10 quae . . . acta essent: Domitius concealed the truth from the garrison, pretending that he still expected Pompey to come to the rescue. But "his looks belied his words" (Cæs. B.C. i. 19); the facts transpired; the soldiers arrested their commander, delivered up the town to Cæsar, and enlisted in his service.

187 11 cum, although. — nec . . . contenderemus, neither I nor my brother felt any hesitation about hastening forward to Brundisium (to join Pompey); § 332, g, N.² (); B. 298, b; G. 555, 3; H. & B. .

187 13 ut caveremus: § 331 (); B. 295, 296; G. 546; H. 498, i (565); H. & B. .

187 14 in eadem loca: Cæsar left Corfinium immediately, and was now in close pursuit of Pompey.

187 14-16 quod . . . venturus esset, because . . . he was sure to reach his destination (Brundisium) even sooner than we could. For mood of venturus esset, see § 321 (); B. 286; G. 541; H. 516, ii (588, ii); H. & B. : the reason is given on the authority of those who dissuaded Cicero from the attempt.

187 15 possemus . . . intenderet: for mood, see § 342 (); B. 324; G. 663; H. 529, ii, N.¹ 1 (652, 1); H. & B. . The informants said: Caesar celerius etiam quam vos poteritis eo quo contendit venturus est (or veniet).

187 17 committere ut . . . noceret, to injure by our rashness not only ourselves, but the state as well: § 332 and e (); B. 297, 1; G.

553, 1; H. 498, ii (564, i); H. & B. . To allow themselves to be captured by Cæsar would do Pompey no good, and would be an injury to the commonwealth.

187 19 quin . . . possemus: § 332, g and R. (); B. 298; G. 555, 2; H. 504, 3, 2 (595, 1); H. & B. . — si . . . fuisset: § 342 (); B. 324; G. 663; H. 529, ii, N.¹, 1 (652); H. & B. . Their thought was: si etiam tutum nobis iter fuerit, Pompeium tamen iam consequi non poterimus (or possumus).

187 21 tuas litteras: this is the letter immediately preceding in this edition (No. XII).

187 26 qui . . . fuissent: § 336, 2 (); B. 314, 1; G. 650; H. 524 (643); H. & B. . A number of important members of the Pompeian party had fallen into Cæsar's hands on the surrender of Corfinium, all of whom he released, in accordance with his custom.

187 28 regionibus (abl. of separation) exclusi, shut out from (certain) regions (as Cicero now was from Apulia).

187 29 arma aliena, the armed bands of another (i.e. a hostile or opposed) party.

187 30 maxime vellem primum, my first and most earnest wish is; vellem implies that the wish is now unfulfilled: § 311, b (); cf. B. 280, 2; G. 258, N. 1; H. 486, i (556); H. & B. . — vellem . . . fuissem: § 267, c (); cf. B. 180, 2, a; G. 261, R.; H. & B. . For ut omitted, see § 331, f, R. (); B. 295, 8; G. 546, *R.*²; H. 499, 2 (565, 2); H. & B. . For tenses, see § 267 (); B. 279; G. 256, 1; H. 483, 2 (558, 1); H. & B. .

187 31 ostenderam, I showed: for epistolary tense, see note on dederam (p. 170, l. 2).

187 33 sine exercitu: the attempt to collect troops in the Capuan district had not been very successful, and Pompey, after fleeing from Rome, had shown little concern for the west of Italy.

187 34 viris fortissimis, i.e. Domitius and the other Pompeians at Corfinium. The allusion conveys a delicate shade of reproach to Pompey for making no attempt to relieve that town. Cicero regarded his conduct as cowardly and disgraceful (see note on p. 187, l. 34).

188 1 non contigit, it was not my good fortune.

188 2 consili: Cicero elsewhere complains that he had known nothing of Pompey's plans: "Shall he who did not inform me of his plans until Corfinium was lost find fault at my not having gone to Brundisium when Cæsar was between me and Brundisium?" (Att. ix. 2. A.) In fact, Pompey had had no real plan for the Italian campaign. The rapid marches of Cæsar had disconcerted him completely, and he was driven out of the country almost before he realized his situation. — suspicionē adsequi, suspect (or guess) it (i.e. your plan). Here, and in what follows, Cicero, though using the most courteous language, makes it clear enough what he thought of Pompey's abandonment of Italy.

188 3 omnia . . . fore, etc., I thought nothing so unlikely to happen as that this, the cause of the state, should be unable to maintain itself, etc.

188 4 quam ut . . . posset: clause of result.

188 5-7 Notice the artful accumulation of negatives: neque, non, minus, nihil, nisi.

188 6 quid . . . secutus (ind. quest.), what your purpose has been.

188 7 idcirco, on that account (i.e. because I do not understand your purpose). — te . . . fecisse, that you have taken no step without exercising the very best judgment: a purely formal expression of respect. Pompey had acted weakly and spasmodically. His plans—such as they were—had been demoralized by the rapidity of Cæsar's movements, and the prestige gained by his distinguished military career had suffered severely. Cicero knew all this well enough. Nor is there anything in this part of his letter, despite its courteous phrases, which actually conceals his opinion from Pompey.

188 9 mea: emphatic. — vel iniqua condicione, even on unfavorable terms. Cicero had been a consistent advocate of peace; but the Pompeians had been insanely confident and eager for war. One reason for Cicero's vacillation, indeed, was the outspoken ferocity of his own party as opposed to the mild policy of Cæsar.

188 10 de urbe (sc. retinenda): Pompey had fled from Rome on the news of Cæsar's approach, and his example was followed by the consuls. Cicero believed that this was a wrong move. He calls it a "mad plan" (amentissimum consilium, Att. vii. 10). — de Italia (sc. retinenda): Cicero had not made known to Pompey his opinion as to holding Italy, because Pompey had never suggested to him till now that there was any question about that. The parenthesis conveys a subtle reproach, none the less stinging for its delicacy of expression.

188 12 mihi non sumo, I do not presume to think. — ut . . . debuerit (clause of result instead of indir. disc.), ought to have prevailed (been adopted); for tense of inf., see § 288, a (); B. 270, 2; H. 537, 1 (618, 2); H. & B. .

188 13 neque id . . . causa, and that (cf. Gr. καὶ ταῦτα) not for the sake of the commonwealth.

188 14 adflicta, prostrate.

188 16 eius rei, i.e. of being with you. In fact Cicero joined Pompey at Dyrrachium several months later (in late autumn or early winter).

188 18 pugnandi cupidis, as the Pompeians had been from the first.

188 19 prae me tuli, I made no secret of the fact that, etc.

188 20 non quin . . . timerem: § 156, f, 321, R. (); B. 286, b; G. 541, 2; H. 516, ii. 2 (588, ii, 2); H. & B. . — eadem, i.e. the abuses and the danger to the constitution likely to result from Cæsar's having a share in the government. Cæsar was the leader of the popular party, and counted among his adherents some of the most turbulent elements in the state. The optimates (Cicero's party) of course regarded him as a furious demagogue.

188 21 inde, then (following primum, l. 19).

188 22 ad te, i.e. from Cæsar. The excuses that follow, though they may sound somewhat hollow, were just and reasonable. So long as Pompey showed himself willing to make terms which would allow Cæsar some share in the government, Cicero could not be blamed for refusing to treat Cæsar as an out-and-out public enemy.

188 23 responderi: used impersonally. — honorifice et large, in honorable and generous terms. Cæsar was to be allowed to stand for the consulship provided he would evacuate the towns he had taken in Italy, and withdraw to his province. This, however, he was unwilling to do. The negotiations referred to took place near the end of January, but came to nothing. — duxi meam rationem, I consulted my own interests (lit. drew up my own account: a mercantile figure, like many Latin idioms).

188 24 tibi probaturum [esse], I should easily justify to you. — pro: see note on p. 185, l. 4.

188 25 pro, in return for.

188 26 meritis, i.e. in suppressing the conspiracy of Catiline. — supplicia, i.e. his banishment.

188 27 si offendissem, etc.: in dir. disc., si offendero . . . subiciar. — eius, i.e. Cæsar.

188 28 cum, although. — consulatus, etc.: see note on l. 23.

188 29 deferebatur, was offered (indic. because it is stated as a fact). The argument is unanswerable. If Pompey and the Senate were actually trying to come to terms with Cæsar, why should Cicero go out of his way to offend the latter? He had already suffered enough. These allusions to his exile are veiled reproaches to Pompey, who had not stood by him in his time of trouble (see Introduction to Letter II, p. 170). — eisdem proeliis, the same contests (i.e. the same as those which he had passed through after the condemnation of Catiline, which resulted in Cicero's exile).

188 ³⁰ semper . . . populare, seemed always to be a kind of favorite object for the attacks of evil-minded citizens. The use of populare suggests that it was easy to win the applause of the popular party by attacking Cicero.

188 ³¹ non prius . . . quam, no sooner . . . than. Cicero says that he not merely suspected the danger; he had plain notification that it existed. He seems somewhat to have exaggerated his peril. It is not likely that Cæsar would have treated him with harshness. Cæsar's mild policy, however, was not at that time understood. A reign of terror was feared, like that of the Sullan proscriptions.

188 ³² neque ea . . . possem, I did not fear them, if they were necessary evils (lit. if they had to be undergone), so much as I thought it my duty to shun them if I could avoid them honorably.

188 ³³ essent . . . possem: subjunc. in informal indir. disc.; peritimi is, in effect, a "verb of thinking."

188 ³⁴ quam . . . ademit, you have my account of myself, put in the briefest possible way, for the time during which there was hope of a peaceful settlement; for the time remaining (i.e. for all the rest of the time since peace became impossible), the course of events (res, the facts of the case) has deprived me of the power (of action); i.e. I have given a good account of myself up to the moment when peace was despaired of, showing you why I was not more active on your side; since that moment I have had no chance of joining you (for the reasons explained in the first part of the letter). — quam brevem, for quam brevissimam, as brief as possible.

189 ¹ rationem: lit. an account or reckoning, such as an agent makes to his principal (a commercial figure, continuing that in p. 188, l. 23). — reliqui (sc. temporis), dependent on facultatem.

189 ³ neque ego, etc., i.e. my course has not been dictated by friendliness to Cæsar or by disloyalty to the state. I have simply preferred to oppose Cæsar by diplomacy (which, indeed, I understood to be the method that you yourself wished to follow) rather than by armed force. The policy of violence has now been adopted, — and I acquiesce. The republic will find me a good citizen, and you will find me a faithful friend.

189 ⁵ hoc . . . interest, there is only this difference.

189 ⁶ quod, that. — cum, while. — ista laude, i.e. the merit of being a patriotic citizen.

189 ⁷ ego: supply malui from maluerunt in l. 8. — condicionibus (abl. of means), negotiations. — quod . . . velle (parenthetic), a method which I had understood that you (also) preferred (alluding, of course, to Pompey's negotiations with Cæsar already mentioned).

189 8 disceptari (impersonal), that the controversy should be conducted. — quae quoniam ratio, and since the latter plan (i.e. armed violence).

189 9 ut . . . desiderēs: result, obj. of perficiam. — a me . . . desiderēs, shall miss in me.

189 10 amici, sc. animum.

XIV

189 12 fama: i.e. reports that Cicero was likely to join Pompey.

189 13 ne quo progredieris, that you would not take any step (literally, advance to any position).

189 14 proclinata iam re, now that affairs have taken a favorable turn for me. Cicero had never dared hope for the ultimate success of Pompey. — integrā, i.e. re integrā, when the whole matter was an open question.

189 16 si, inasmuch as. In following Pompey now, Cæsar argues, Cicero will not seem to be following fortune (for Pompey is unlikely to win), nor the cause (since in that case he would have joined the Pompeians at once); he will rather seem to be acting in condemnation of Cæsar.

189 19 meum aliquod factum, some act of mine.

190 2 quod, a course which.

190 5 reperies: a distinct enough promise; as if Cæsar had said, "Only do not join the Pompeians, and I will see that your safety and dignity are provided for."

XV

191 1 C. Trebatius: see Letter VIII, p. 179.

191 2 moleste te ferre, that you feel regret. — quod, that.

191 3 ad urbem, to the walls of the city.

191 4 si . . . accessissem: for the fut. perf. of the direct discourse.

191 5 de officio, about the duty of us both (as citizens in the present crisis). — nostrum: § 194, b (); B. 242, 2; G. 364, R.; H. 446, N.³ (500, 4); H. & B. .

191 6 salvis rebus, while the state was still in safety. The expression is much stronger than a literal English translation suggests. The force of the words may be given by some such phrase as before the downfall of the state. — sic . . . dicendum, for that is the word to use.

191 8 absens, i.e. in my Cilician province.

191 9 mala, i.e. the Civil War. — multo ante, long before they took place. — in consulatu: Sulpicius was consul B.C. 51.

191 10 cum, though. — consilium, i.e. his purpose of reconciling Cæsar and Pompey.

191 12 sero, too late (since the quarrel had gone too far). — solus eram, I stood alone. — rudis, etc., I was thought to be not well acquainted with the case (the figure is that of a lawyer who has not the facts well in hand).

191 14 nunc: opposed to salvis rebus (l. 6). — nihil (emphatic), not at all, in no possible way: adverbial acc.; § 240, a (); B. 176, 3; G. 333; H. 378, 2 (416, 2); H. & B. .

191 15 nobismet ipsis consulere, to take counsel for our own welfare (since the stote is past hope). — possimus: subj. of characteristic.

191 17 lugeamus: suggesting that there is nothing to be done but to express our sorrow at the catastrophe. — quicum: § 104, c (); B. 89, footnote 1; G. 105, 3; H. 187, 1, 2 (182, 1, 2); H. & B. .

191 19 clarissimorum, etc., i.e. Sulpicius is well acquainted with history and philosophy. The ancients valued both of these studies as affording rules for human conduct, not merely for the cultivation of the mind (cf. p. 160, ll. 18–26).

191 21 te fugiunt, escape your memory. — scripsissem (cont. to fact): the protasis is ni veritus essem (l. 23). — in senatum, i.e. the Senate called together by Cæsar. Sulpicius had taken his seat in this body, but this Cicero had refused to do. He will not even call it the Senate — it is rather a mere informal meeting of senators (conventum senatorum).

191 23 ne . . . offenderem, to hurt the feelings of one who, etc., i.e. of Cæsar, who had expressed the hope that Cicero would take his seat in the reorganized Senate.

191 25 eadem omnia, etc.: Cicero had told Cæsar that he should regard it as his duty, in case he acceded to Cæsar's request and entered the Senate, to speak against Cæsar's proposed Spanish expedition and his purpose to pursue Pompey with an army. He dexterously compliments both Sulpicius and himself by remarking that Sulpicius had taken the same independent attitude on these questions.

191 27 res . . . habeat (indir. quest.), you see what the position of affairs is. — imperiiis distributis (abl. abs.), divided up among different military commands.

191 28 ardere (indir. disc.), is ablaze.

191 30 non modo: § 209, a (); B. 347, 2; G. 445; H. 553, 2 (656, 2); H. & B. . — quod sperem: § 320, a (); B. 283, 2; G. 631, 2; H. 503, i (591, 1); H. & B. .

192 1 longius: Cicero was thinking of leaving Italy altogether. His words were doubtless intended to hint at his purpose of going to Greece to join Pompey. — cogitabam: for mood, see § 313, e (); B. 309, 2; G. 605; H. 515, i (586, 1); H. & B. .

192 3 ut . . . ne recusaret, so that he may not refuse: § 319, a, N. (); G. 546, 2; H. 499, 1; H. & B. .

192 4 ut facias: purp. clause, obj. of velim; in the line before, velles takes the acc. and inf.; § 331, b and N. (); B. 331, iv, a; G. 546, 2, R.¹; H. 498, i, 535, ii (614); H. & B. .—tuorum fidelium, of your own confidential friends.

192 5 mittas: in the same construction as facias (l. 4).

192 8 exploratum habeam: result, following tantum in l. 7; the relative clause with quantum is in a manner parenthetical. We might express the sense by translating: I ascribe so much credit to you (and perhaps I claim as much for myself) that I regard it as certain that, etc.

XVI

192 10 quid fieri placeret, what I wished to be done, i.e. with reference to the divorce of Cicero's daughter Tullia, whose husband, Dolabella, had been making a great deal of trouble (see introductory note to Letter XIX, p. 194). — ad Pomponium, i.e. T. Pomponius Atticus, who was at Rome.

192 13 velim: § 311, b (); cf. B. 280, 2, a; G. 257; II. 486, i (556); H. & B.

XVII

193 2 liberales, courteous and kind. Cæsar's letter is lost, but Cicero says elsewhere (in Ligarium, § 7): "[Cæsar] ad me ex Egypto litteras misit, ut essem idem qui fuisset" (an assurance that his dignity was not to suffer). — opiniōe: § 247, b (); B. 217, 4; G. 398, N.¹; H. 417, 1, N.⁵ (471, 7); H. & B. .

193 3 cui: § 228, b (). — hic, i.e. at Brundisium. Cæsar landed at Tarentum, and started for Brundisium by land. His interview with Cicero is described by Plutarch, Life of Cicero, 39.

193 4 mihi: not to me (which would be ad me), but rather for me.

XVIII

193 7 familiaritas consuetudoque, friendship and intimacy.

193 8 patre eius: Cicero had defended the elder Cæcina in an oration (Pro Cæcina) which is still extant.

193 9 plurimum sum usus, enjoyed the especial friendship. — hunc, i.e. the younger Cæcina.

193 12 studiis communibus: Cæcina was himself an author.

193 15 quibuscumque rebus possim, by every means in my power.

193 16 reliquum est ut . . . petam: § 332, a (); B. 297, 2;

G. 553, 4; H. 501, i, 1 (571, 1); H. & B. . — cum cognorim, since I know (lit. have perceived).

193 17 pluribus, many. — quid . . . sentias (indir. quest.), what your sentiments are. — bonorum, good citizens, i.e. the optimates.

193 18 nisi, except.

193 18–21 ut ad eam voluntatem, etc., that to the good will which you are sure to feel toward Cæcina of your own accord, you add, by reason of my recommendation, an amount proportionate to the regard in which I know I am held by you.

193 20 quantum (correl. with tantum) : gen. of indefinite value with fieri; § 252, a (); B. 211, 3, a; G. 379; H. 405 (448, 4); H. & B.

XIX

194 1 etsi . . . eram . . . capiebam : for mood, see § 313, c (); cf. B. 309; G. 604; H. 515, ii (586, ii); H. & B. .

194 2 non possum non confiteri, I must confess.

194 6 valetudinis causa : the region of Pompeii was a favorite "health resort"; Baiae was especially noted for its salubrious air.

194 7 praeterea, etc., and besides, my friends from the free towns in great numbers. For municipium, see Introduction, pp. liii–liv.

194 8 quin . . . agant : § 319, d (); B. 284, 3; G. 632; H. 504, 1 (595, 4); H. & B. . — cum . . . extulerunt : § 323, 1, 325 (); G. 580; H. 521, i (600); H. & B.

195 1 te . . . praebeas, are showing yourself.

195 3 quae facias . . . facere, do what you are doing. — nec . . . consilio, and need nobody's advice.

195 5 omnis, altogether, entirely. — profecta, to have sprung from.

195 6 valde, emphatically.

195 8 Agamemnoni : Agamemnon was commander of the Greeks at Troy; Nestor, the oldest of the Grecians, was their counsellor. Cicero takes pleasure in thinking of himself as a veteran consul, who has saved the state on a former occasion and now sees one of his pupils saving it in his turn. The exaggeration of this passage is not more remarkable than its easy and finished eloquence.

195 9–10 te . . . florere : subject of est, understood after gloriosum. — iuvenem : Dolabella was under the legal age (see p. lix) and had never been praetor. — quasi, as it were.

195 12 L. Caesar : L. Julius Caesar, a relative of the great Caesar and one of his legati in Gaul. After Caesar's death he joined the Senatorial party.

195 12 ad eum . . . Neapolim, to him at Naples : observe the difference of idiom, and cf. § 259, h (); B. 182, 2, b ; G. 337, 6 ; H. (418, 1) ; H. & B. .

195 15 cum tantum vales, etc., that you are so strong with Dolabella. For mood, see § 326, a (); cf. B. 290, 1 ; G. 582 ; H. 517, 2 (599) ; H. & B. . — quantum si ego . . . valerem, and if I had as much (influence), etc.

195 16 sororis filium : Antony, who was the son of L. Cæsar's sister Julia. For the political position of Antony, see p. 197.

195 16 possemus : apod. of a present condition contrary to fact ; for mood, see § 308, c, N.¹ (); B. 304, 3, N. ; G. 597, R. 3, (b) ; H. & B. .

196 2 post te consulem, since your consulship. Cicero had reason to be proud of his own consular administration.

196 3 deinde multa (sc. dixit), etc., next he had much to say of what you had done and of your management of the affair, and then (he added) that nothing, etc. This alludes to Dolabella's act in demolishing a column erected in the Forum "to Cæsar, Father of his Country," and in punishing with death those who had set it up. The figure on p. 195 shows what is thought to be the base of this column. It is taken from Lanciani's 'New Tales of Old Rome,' where an interesting account of excavations in and near the Forum may be found.

196 4 actum [esse] : indir. disc. ; the subject is nihil.

196 7 alienae gloriae, of another's glory. — cernere, to accept ; cernere was the technical term for entering upon an inheritance. — aliqua ex parte, to some extent.

196 8 quamquam, and yet : § 313, f (); B. 309, 5 ; G. 605, R. 2 ; H. 515, N. 2 (586, 4) ; H. & B. .

196 9 haec enim iocatus sum, for in all this I have merely been jesting (i.e. in what he has said about having a share in Dolabella's glory) ; haec is cogn. acc. with iocatus sum ; § 238, b (); cf. B. 176, 2 ; G. 333 ; H. 375 (412) ; H. & B. . — si modo sunt aliquae meae, if, to be sure, I have any.

196 10 transfuderim . . . exhausserim : § 311, a (); B. 280 ; G. 257, 2 ; H. 486, i (556) ; H. & B. .

196 11 cum . . . tum, not only . . . but also ; cum is also causal here (hence the subjunctive). The passage cannot well be literally rendered. We may translate : while I have always loved you, I am now, in addition (tum) so fired by your actions that no love (lit. nothing in affection) was ever more ardent.

196 15 amabilis, more worthy of love.

196 16 M. Brutum : the conspirator.

196 18 constantiam, strength of character. — Idibus Martiis (abl. of time) : the date of Caesar's murder. The conspirators were regarded by Cicero and by themselves as tyrannicides, as assertors of their country's freedom. "The Ides of March" became the watchword of the Senatorial party. See Fig. on p. 196, the famous coin of Brutus, struck in commemoration of the deed. The reverse shows a cap of liberty between two daggers and the legend EID·MAR ("the Ides of March"). — tantum accessit, so much was added.

196 19 locum fuisse augendi, that there was room for increase.

196 20 qui putaret : § 320, a (); B. 283, 2; G. 631, 2; H. 503, i (591, 1); H. & B. .

196 22 nunc denique, now for the first time (lit. now at length, i.e. now and not before).

196 23 dilexisse, merely to have had a liking for you (a weaker word than amare).

196 24 quid est quod, etc., why should I, etc. : see note on p. 102, l. 1.

196 25 servias, devote yourself to. — proponam, shall I set before you (as examples)? § 268 (); B. 277; G. 465; H. 484, v (559, 4); H. & B. ; see note on p. 193, l. 19. — quod . . . solent, as those are wont to do : the unexpressed subject of solent is the antecedent of qui.

196 27 te (emphatic) imitere, etc., you must imitate YOURSELF (your own example), you must vie with YOURSELF. — imitere . . . certes : § 331, i, and N.¹ (); B. 295, 6; G. 535, R.²; H. 502, 1 (564, ii, 1); H. & B. .

197 2 utendum est : § 294, c and N. (); B. 337, 7, b; G. 251, 2, 427, N.⁴; H. & B. .

197 3 contigit . . . tibi, it has been your happy lot. — quod . . . nemini, something that I rather think has never happened to any one else (anticipating the substantive clause ut . . . esset).

197 4 severitas animadversionis, sternness in the infliction of punishment. Dolabella had caused some of the persons concerned in setting up the column in Caesar's memory to be thrown from the Tarpeian Rock and had crucified others. Cicero regards his action as necessary and laudable. — invidiosa, a cause of odium.

197 5 popularis, a source of popularity. — cum . . . tum, not only . . . but also, both . . . and (so in l. 8, below). — bonis, i.e. (as usual) the optimates.

197 8 magnitudine : abl. of cause.

197 9 contionem: an address at a public meeting of citizens held for debate or address only (see p. 273).

197 10 accessūs (approaches) . . . recessūs (withdrawals): nom. pl., subj. of facti [sunt]. Translate: so cautiously and gradually did you (in your speech) now make your approaches to the case, and then again draw back from the subject, that the facts themselves, by common consent, gave ripe occasion for the punishment (which you inflicted): i.e. all agreed that it was high time for such severe measures as those you took.

197 12 liberasti, etc.: the column in Cæsar's honor had been a rallying place for disorderly Cæsarians. There had been much rioting, and a general émeute was feared. Dolabella's sharp measures (characteristic of Roman cruelty) cowed the populace for a time.

197 13 ad tempus, for the present crisis.

197 14 ad exemplum, for an example (to posterity); cf. p. 196, ll. 26-27.

197 15 in te positam, etc., the safety of the state depends on you. — tibi: dat. of agent.

197 16 tuendos: Dolabella had protected the conspirators—the "liberators," as Cicero calls them—from mob violence. — illos viros, i.e. Brutus and his associates.

197 18 coram, face to face. — plura, sc. dicam.

197 19 conservas: note the tense; the state is not yet safe, but Dolabella is saving it. — fac ut: § 269, g (); G. 271, 1; H. & B. . . .

XX

199 1 sententiam et orationem, i.e. the opinions expressed by Cicero in the First Philippic, and the form in which he expressed them.

199 2 qua . . . liceret, if I were free to express myself in that way oftener: the antecedent of qua is sententiam et orationem. — nihil esset negoti, there would be no difficulty. — libertatem . . . reciperare: Cicero found that the death of Cæsar had not restored the constitution. Antony had become in his eyes a worse tyrant than Cæsar himself. He more than once gave utterance to his regret that Antony had not been murdered too.

199 3 homo amens, i.e. Antony.

199 4 ille ipse, i.e. Cæsar. — quem tu, etc., whom you have said to be the greatest criminal that was ever put to death.

199 5 caedis, a massacre.

200 1 auctorem, instigator. This charge was brought against Cicero by Antony in his reply to the First Philippic.

200 2 veterani, i.e. Cæsar's veterans.

200 3 modo, if only. — facti, i.e. the assassination of Cæsar.

200 4 communicet: § 314 (); B. 310, ii; G. 573; II. 513, i (587); H. & B. . — Pisoni: Caesar's father-in-law, L. Calpurnius Piso (see note on p. 184, l. 16. — invectus est: Piso's speech against Antony was delivered in the Senate, August 1, B.C. 44.

200 5 tricensimo die: i.e. in the First Philippic.

200 6 P. Servilio: P. Servilius Vatia, Caesar's colleague in the consulship in B.C. 48. He was now a member of the Senatorial party, and had spoken against Antony on Sept. 2. — est consecutus, followed in my footsteps.

200 7 caedem (emphatic, for a massacre is what the cut-throat is striving for. Gladiator is one of Cicero's epithets for Antony.

200 8 a. d. XIII. Kal. Octobr., on the nineteenth of September (the date of Antony's reply to the First Philippic). — a me, with me (lit. from me). — ad quem, on which (day).

200 9 venerat, i.e. into the Senate. — Metelli, i.e. L. Metellus Scipio, Pompey's father-in-law. He had commanded the Pompeian forces in Africa, and had committed suicide (B.C. 46) after Caesar's victory at Thapsus. His villa at Tibur was now in Antony's possession, and it was there that he prepared the speech in question. — commentatus esset, had prepared his speech.

200 13 quod scribis, etc., as to your writing that, etc.

200 15 ut in tantis malis, considering the desperate circumstances (lit. as in so great evils).

200 16 tris . . . consulares: Piso, Cicero, and Servilius. — quae . . . senserint, i.e. their patriotic sentiments.

200 19 nec est, etc., and there is no reason why you should expect anything further (to be accomplished), i.e. anything beyond what has just been mentioned.

200 20 necessarius: M. Lepidus, afterwards the triumvir (see Fig. 50). He and Cassius had married half-sisters of Brutus. — adfinitate, alliance (by marriage). Lepidus' son had recently married Antony's daughter.

200 21 ludorum: the ludi Apollinares (in honor of Apollo), held June 5, had been paid for by Brutus, though he was unable to be present.

The favor with which they were received was a tribute to the liberator, and therefore unpleasant to Lepidus. Cicero says, jestingly, that Lepidus has lost his taste for sports.—fratris tui (obj. gen.): probably L. Cassius. The applause referred to may have been at the ludi Apollinares, or on some other public occasion. It was construed as a compliment to C. Cassius, who was not in the city.—dirumpitur, i.e. with envy.

200 22 alter . . . adfinis: some connection of Cassius, whom Antony has conciliated by means of bribery; it is not known who is meant.—novis commentariis, by means of a new instalment of Caesar's commentaries. Antony had got possession of Caesar's papers, and professed to be acting in accordance with instructions and plans which they contained. Many of the documents which he produced were, however, forged grants of money, etc., in which he and his wife, Fulvia, drove a thriving trade. Caesar's writings on the Gallic and the Civil War were called commentarii (i.e. notes), and Cicero is here punning on the word.

200 23 quod est qui, that there is a man who; § 333 (); B. 299, i, b; G. 540; H. 540, iv, N. (588, 1); H. & B. . It is not known who this was.—vestro anno: observe the plural possessive, applying to Brutus as well as Cassius. They were now prætors, and were not eligible for the consulship until B.C. 41 (see note on the cursus honorum, Introduction, p. lix). Before this year had come, both of the "liberators" were dead (the Battle of Philippi took place in B.C. 42).

200 25 huic latroni, i.e. Antony.—prae se ferat, declares.—Cotta: L. Aurelius Cotta (consul B.C. 65); an old friend of Cicero's. It was he who proposed the supplicatio for the suppression of Catiline's conspiracy, and he was instrumental in Cicero's recall from exile (B.C. 57).—nam: Cicero is giving the reasons why Cassius has little to expect from any of his friends at Rome. He began with enim, in l. 19, and now continues with nam, after a kind of parenthesis (sed haec . . . ferat, ll. 23–25).

200 27 L. Caesar: see p. 195, l. 12 and note.

200 28 Sulpicius: Cicero's friend, the eminent lawyer, Servius Sulpicius Rufus (see introduction to Letter XV, p. 190).—summa auctoritate, a man of the greatest influence.

200 29 non adest, is out of town.

200 30 designatis, the consuls elect. These were Aulus Hirtius and C. Vibius Pansa (see p. 199).

200 31 consularis, as men of consular rank (i.e. they were not worthy of the name).—habes, etc., here you have (i.e. in the enumeration just given).

FIG. 51

COIN OF PANSA

200 32 etiam bonis rebus, even if the condition of public affairs were good; an informal protasis, contrary to fact, of which the apodosis is esset. — perditis (belongs to rebus), when it (i.e. the condition of affairs) is desperate.

200 33 qui si, but if you. — abestis, i.e. from Rome. — idcirco: § 317, a (); G. 545, 1; H. 497, ii, 1 (568, 3); H. & B. . — ut sitis in tuto, for the sake of your own safety.

200 34 aliquid, some measure (or movement).

201 1 velim salvis nobis, I wish (it may take place) while I am alive. This sounds like a presentiment of Cicero's fate. See Introd., p. xxvi. — sin id minus, but if that is not to be, i.e. if I do not live to see you restore the state.

201 2 ego: emphatic. — tuis, your friends.

201 3 ad me referent, apply to me (or consult me).

XXI

201 10 adiungeris . . . feceris: cf. p. 179, l. 18, and note.
